Nazis Bomb Scapa Flow, Vow to Smash Britain's Fleet; Moscow Defied by Turks

Roosevelt Seeks Haven For Refugee Millions

Proposes Surveys Be Started Now For Areas to Settle Victims of Strife

By Felix Cotten.

President Roosevelt yesterday tossed into the laps of officers of the Intergovernmental Committee for Refugees a proposal that surveys be started now for new areas in which to locate millions—possibly between 10,000,000 and 20,000,000 persons—who will be bereft of home and country by the present war.

At the same time, he urged the officers not to abandon, because of difficulties incident to the war, the work of finding homes for between 150,000 and 200,000 victims of Nazi racial and religious persecution. The committee, he declared, should redouble its efforts.

Mr. Roosevelt's proposal was made at a White House luncheon attended by the executive group of the committee, Secretary of State Hull, Undersecretary Welles, and James G. McDonald, New York, chairman of the President's Advisory Committee on Political Refugees. Committee officers present were: Lord Winterton, chairman; Myron C. Taylor, former chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation and a vice chairman of the committee; Sir Herbert Emerson, director; Senor Don Felipe A. Espil, Argentine Ambassador; Count de Saint-Quentin, French Ambassador; Carlos Martins, Brazilian Ambassador, and Dr. A. Loudon, Netherlands Minister.

Unprepared for Proposal

The luncheon opened a two-day meeting of the committee executive group here. Paul Van Zeeland, former prime minister of Belgium and chairman of the coordinating foundation set up some time ago to take over certain functions of the committee, was unable to attend, as he had planned, owing to delay in reaching New York. He is expected here today, however.

Representatives of other governments on the executive group, it is understood, were unprepared for the President's proposal for a gigantic resettlement program for refugees of the present war. As a result, a meeting of the group probably will be held here next week to consider the suggestion.

After the White House luncheon, the committee officers adjourned to the State Department for their opening session. High lights of the meeting were:

Sir Herbert, in a lengthy report, announced that although negotiations with Nazi authorities were proceeding very encouragingly up to the outbreak of war, the war has made it impracticable to continue negotiations with a view to working out plans for resettling refugees.

War Cuts Off Aid

The situation confronting some 68,000 refugees from Germany now in neutral countries—such as Belgium, the Netherlands, and Switzerland—is critical and requires immediate attention, he said. Due to the war, aid from British and French sources to these homeless persons has been withdrawn, and they are forced to rely entirely on aid from private sources in the United States.

Lord Winterton said that, due to the war, it would be difficult for governments to render financial aid in the resettlement work. His announcement was in line with what had been expected, although he had told the committees before war appeared to be imminent, that the British government was prepared to consider contributions.

McDonald told the group a start would be made in the immediate future toward locating refugees in two of the projects investigated by the committee, Mindanao, southernmost island of the Philippine archipelago, and the Dominican Republic. Money is available from private sources, he said, to make a beginning.

The attitude of officers of the committee representing other governments, it was learned, was that

Andrews Quits, Army Man in Pay-Hour Job

Col. Fleming Not Surprised; Resigned Chief Goes to RFC

By the Associated Press

Elmer F. Andrews stepped out as wage-hour administrator yesterday amid a chorus of conflicting explanations for his departure.

Praise for the way he had put the year-old wage-hour act into operation mingled with contentions that he had not been tough enough that he had been too tough and that he had clashed with Secretary of Labor Perkins.

Neither the White House nor Andrews gave any explanation of his resignation, although President Roosevelt's letter of acceptance expressed "heartfelt appreciation" for what he had done to make the new division "operate smoothly and efficiently."

Lieut. Col. Philip Fleming, Army district engineer at St. Paul, named by the White House to take over Andrews' duties, said only that the news was not unexpected. It was said at the White House that Andrews would be named to a post with the RFC.

Meanwhile, Paul Sifton, deputy wage-hour administrator who had served under Andrews when the latter was industrial commissioner of New York State, added his resignation to that of his chief. He explained he did it "to facilitate the work of the new management in

Red Demands Held Threat To Security

Contrary to Policy On Dardanelles and Allies' Pacts, Says Prime Minister

By the Associated Press

Istanbul, Turkey, Oct. 17.—Prime Minister Refik Saydam, in an official communique tonight, said negotiations with Russia had failed because the Soviet demands were contrary to Turkish security.

It was reported reliably that a definite agreement with Britain will be signed at Ankara this week, probably Thursday or Friday.

The official communique said the prime minister, in a statement to a parliamentary group of the Republican Peoples Party, declared the Soviet government had made to Turkey proposals entirely different from those previously agreed upon.

The prime minister said the Soviet demands were incompatible with Turkish policy regarding the Dardanelles, proved incompatible with Turkey's engagements which the Soviet government knew had been assumed toward Britain and France, were contrary to Turkish security and the guarantees offered did not compensate for the obligations which Turkey was asked to undertake.

Relations Still Friendly

He said, however, that although it had been impossible this time to conclude an agreement with Soviet Russia, relations between the two countries were still friendly.

The communique was issued from Ankara, the Turkish capital. Following its issuance the cabinet met with President Inonu and with the president of the National Assembly, Abdul Halik Renda, and the chief of the general staff, Field Marshal Feczi Tchakmak, present.

[Simultaneously, Franz von Papen, German Ambassador to Turkey left Ankara for Berlin. Well-informed Turkish circles displayed astonishment at Von Papen's departure, according to International News Service.]

Definite terms of the Turkish-British pact were not announced Turkey has signed a pact with France, however, providing for mutual assistance in event of war in the Mediterranean. A similar agreement with Britain has not yet been signed.

Saracoglu Quits Moscow

Moscow (Wednesday), Oct. 18 (AP).—Foreign Minister Saracoglu of Turkey left for home early today to the blare of bands and well wishes of high Soviet officials.

Vice Commissar of Foreign Affairs Vladimir Potemkin headed Soviet officials bidding farewell to Saracoglu at the flag-bedecked station in an imposing send-off which contrasted sharply with departure Saturday night of a Finnish delegation. Not a Kremlin official was there to see the Finns off.

Saracoglu had been here almost a month negotiating with Soviet officials.

There was one unconfirmed report here that the Turkish mission had refused point blank a Soviet demand that Russian warships be the only ones permitted to enter the Black Sea, "Russia's back door," through the Turkish-owned Dardanelles.

Germans Ignore Sendoff

But if Soviet officials were discouraged by the failure of the negotiations, they failed to show it at tonight's rousing sendoff. The event rivaled in magnitude the departure of German Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop on his second visit to Moscow to conclude a non-aggression pact.

Soviet and Turkish flags decorated the station and there was a guard of honor of 200, including the band.

Spotlights played upon the station and the band played the Turkish anthem and "the Internationale." There was a pouring rain before the train left, but that didn't seem to dampen the ardor of the occasion.

Besides Soviet officials, there was an impressive turnout from the British and French embassies, including British Ambassador Sir William Seeds. A number of envoys of the Balkan states also were present, but the German Embassy was not represented.

Intimate Glimpse of Nazidom:

U-Boat Captain Tells of Sinking Royal Oak; Henderson Publishes 'Tragedy' of Hitler

By Hugh Wagnon.
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Oct. 17.—Britain made public tonight the "final report" of Sir Nevile Henderson on his ambassadorship to Berlin, in which he recounted in picturesque phrases the last days of peace, the "tragedy" of Adolf Hitler and sidelights on "yes men" around the Nazi chieftain.

The 12,000-word White Paper stressed repeatedly that Hitler alone made the decision to go to war, Sir Nevile writing that "though he spoke of his artistic tastes and his longing to satisfy them, I derived the impression that the corporal of the last war was even more anxious to prove what he could de as a conquering generalissimo in the next."

Of Hitler's personality, he asserted "geniuses are strange creatures and Herr Hitler, among other paradoxes, is a mixture of long-headed calculation and violent and arrogant impulse provoked by resentment."

Referring to the "bombshell" of the German nonagression pact with Soviet Russia, Sir Nevile said:

"It is to be devoutly hoped that is may prove as Pyrrhic as are most diplomatic victories."

"I have some reason to believe—though I cannot confirm it—that the order for the German army to advance into Poland was actually issued for the night of August 25-26," the former Ambassador asserted, and added that his flying trip to Hitler's chalet at Berchtesgaden "may

Berlin, Oct. 17.—The most audacious naval feat of the war was described today by the commander of the submarine which accomplished it—the sinking of the British battleship Royal Oak and the torpedoing of the battle cruiser Repulse in Scapa Flow, British naval base and fleet rendezvous in the Orkney Islands.

(The British admit the sinking of the Royal Oak, but have stanchly denied any damage to the Repulse.)

The submarine returned to port today, bringing the commander's dramatic account of the penetration of anti-submarine nets and a mine barrage to attack the two vessels and its subsequent escape. At the same time the German navy announced that the scene of the sinking was Scapa Flow.

Grand Admiral Erich Raeder, commander in chief of the German fleet, greeted the commander, Lieut. Comdr. Prien, and awarded Iron Crosses of the first and second class to the officers and men.

Prien related that his submersible slipped into the bay at Scapa Flow, selected and torpedoed the Royal Oak and Repulse while they were at anchor and escaped through the British mine field and submarine nets.

Prien said he was inspired by a desire to honor Admiral Reuter who, in June, 1919, saved the German navy from a dishonorable surrender by scuttling the fleet at Scapa Flow, where the British

Berlin Hails Attacks on England as Victory Key

Reich Denies Any U-Boats Lost in Sinking Royal Oak; Strategy Disclosed

By Percy Knauth
Copyright by New York Times.

Berlin, Oct. 17.—German bombers this morning attacked and bombed the British fleet at Scapa Flow, scoring direct hits on at least one battleship and other lighter craft, and shooting down one British plane, it was claimed here tonight. British antiaircraft artillery brought down one German bomber, it was reported.

These raids, taken with the submarine foray into the same mighty British naval base last Saturday, were described by German officialdom as part of a lightning campaign to break British fleet resistance.

Warning of air and sea attacks to come was given by one highly placed German official, who declared:

"After a week or ten days of this uninterrupted attacking, Britain will see what is left of her fleet."

Britain Admits Two Raids

The German bombers evidently took off early this morning from northwest Germany and were over Scapa Flow between 10 and 11 o'clock. The planes were supposedly Junkers dive-bombers, carrying 250 and 500 kilo bombs. The battleship was reportedly struck by several bombs. No details were published as to the other ships also reportedly hit.

(Britain disclosed there had been two air raids today on Scapa Flow, and said one training ship, the Iron Duke, was slightly damaged. No British losses were admitted. Four German planes were shot down, the British said.)

The German press characterized today's army report as being indicative of "the spirit of attack." Since the conclusion of the Polish campaign, Germany has not reported such a list of outstanding successes.

The air raid on Scapa Flow was not included, since it was made known only late tonight, but beyond this there was the report from the U-boat which torpedoed the Royal Oak and the Repulse, and the report of the air raid on the Firth of Forth yesterday.

War Strategy Shown

The names of the British ships which were hit at the Firth of Forth were published here today, increasing the impression of large-scale activity, which now has characterized German reports for a week.

These reports give evidence of Germany's determination to intensify her drive against Great Britain and show further the lines of the Reich's war strategy for the near future at least.

German press comment revealed what is in the German mind in asserting England's domination of the seas is nearing an end. Seen from Berlin this allegation had at least a ring of truth, for while the Germans have been bombing and torpedoing British warships practically at will, there has been no evidence reported here of retaliation by Great Britain.

Crippling the British fleet seemed to be the main point of the present

Parley Today Seeks Ship Ban Compromise

Called by Pittman; Filibuster 'Going on Now,' Connally Jests

By Robert C. Albright

A conference today of Senate Foreign Relations Committee Democrats was called last night by Senator Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, in an effort to compromise neutrality bill restrictions on American shipping and speed Senate action on the measure.

The move to eliminate a major side controversy and narrow the fight to embargo repeal coincided with a forecast by Senate Mapority Leader Barkley that general debate would conclude this week and a final vote will be reached before the close of next.

Barkley said he had no formal agreement on terminating the fight, but said conferences with several leading members of the opposition developed a "general feeling" that this week-end would largely wind up debate and quick action would follow on amendments and the bill.

Barkley declined to comment on a casual suggestion of an opposition "filibuster" by Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas. Connally made the remark, half-jesting, half-serious, in an exchange with Senator Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, opponent of repeal. The Texan mentioned "the minority that is now filibustering in the United States Senate."

It was the first time the word had been mentioned in the 12-day floor fight, which both sides informally agreed would be confined to "legitimate debate." Senate Minority Leader McNary from the outset has counseled speedy action. Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, leading Democratic opponent, said he saw n reason why action could not be concluded in "a couple of weeks."

Barkley said he hoped Congress could adjourn around November 11.

Reds Reassure Roosevelt on Finns' Liberty

Talks Keep Principle Of 1920 Guarantee, Kalinin Asserts

By William V. Nessly.

President Roosevelt has been told by President Kalinin, of Soviet Russia, he revealed yesterday, that present negotiations between Russia and Finland are in harmony with Soviet recognition of Finland's independence and sovereignty.

The "sole aim" of the negotiations, the Soviet President wrote, is "a strengthening of friendly co-operation between both countries in the cause of guaranteeing the security of the Soviet Union and Finland."

Mr. Roosevelt made public, immediately after his press conference yesterday, the exchange of correspondence last week between the two presidents.

It included the text of the personal note he sent last Wednesday to the Soviet president, expressing the "earnest hope that the Soviet Union will make no demands on Finland which are inconsistent with the maintenance and development of amicable and peaceful relations between the two countries, and the independence of each."

Kalinin Cites Treaties

Likewise published was President Kalinin's reply calling attention to the fact that state independence of the Finnish Republic "was recognized by the free will of the Soviet government on December 31, 1916, and that the sovereignty of Finland was guaranteed to it by the peace treaty of October 14, 1920," between Russia and Finland.

President Kalinin said these acts defined the "basic principles of the reciprocal relations" between the two countries, and declared the current negotiations "are being conducted in conformity with these principles."

He took occasion to refer caustically to "the tendentious versions which are being disseminated by

Nazis Charged Into a Trap, French Say

100,000 Caught in Crossfire, but Hold Gains in Skirmishes

By G. H. Archambault.
Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Oct. 17.—Hurling more than 100,000 men into the long awaited large scale attack the Germans last evening advanced on a 20-mile front beyond the thin line of French outposts only to be halted by a deadly interlocking fire from the main line of resistance, to which the bulk of the French force had been withdrawn more than two weeks ago.

The German losses are reported to be heavy since the nature of the ground and conditions of the operation precluded the use of tanks to support the infantry. The French claim that except at one or two points, they continue to occupy German territory. Today the situation remained stationary despite sharp engagements all along the line.

Attack Near Saarbruecken

The offensive was followed this morning by an operation east of the Moselle River 4-mile front attacked yesterday.

The second attack came in the Saarbruecken - Zweibruecken - Pirmasens sector which has been the most active of all since the beginning of the war. It is most vital from the German point of view, since it commands the heart of the Saar industrial region with its many coal mines and steel mills.

Other parts of the front were quiet, west of Saarbruecken, because the Saar River separates the respective armies, east of Pirmasens, and because the vast Hardt forest does not lend itself to military operations. But the Germans made use of every mile of ground suitable for the attack.

So the battle is engaged in earnest. In view of special conditions the combination of a war of position and a war of movement with a wall behind each combatant—it may last for weeks. Ignorance of the Germans' ultimate objective makes any forecast hazardous.

[Military observers ni Basel expressed belief the German attacks are only feints in preparation for a larger drive against the Wissembourg-Lauterbourg-Rhine triangle, the Associated Press said.

[For the third successive day and night the Germans continued a concentration of troops and offensive material at Karlsruhe and other points around the strategic Lauterbourg sector.—Editor's note.]

Yesterday's developments are described as follows:

Communique No. 87 issued this morning by the French G. H. Q.

The War Today . . .

GERMANY JUBILANTLY greeted news of air and submarine raids on Britain's naval base at Scapa Flow with the warning that Britain's fleet soon will be brought to its knees.

TURKISH-RUSSIAN negotiations failed because Soviet demands were contrary to Turkish security, Turkish premier disclosed as Foreign Minister Saracoglu left Moscow; alliance with Britain reported imminent.

FUEHRER HITLER ALONE decided on war, Britain's former Ambassador to Berlin declared in a colorful account of the diplomatic dealings in the last week before the war.

IRON CROSSES were awarded officers and crew of the German submarine which made the daring raid into Scapa Flow, sinking at least one British battleship.

BRITAIN CLAIMED at least a fourth of Germany's U-boats had been sunk, but admitted the Scapa Flow foray was a mystery.

100,000 GERMANS attacked on a 20-mile front in the Saar sector of the Western Front, but were repulsed with heavy losses, French said.

THREE KINGS and a President—heads of the three Scandinavian states and Finland—meet today at Stockholm, possibly to declare support of Finland in Moscow negotiations.

SOVIET RUSSIA gave Turkey's foreign minister a gala send-off, then turned to greet a German delegation sent to discuss minority repatriation; Jews reported fleeing from German to Russian Poland.

Royal Oak Sunk At Anchor, Churchill Says

How Sub Slipped by Scapa Flow Defenses Mystifies Admiralty

By Raymond Daniell.
Copyright by New York Times.

London, Oct. 17.—A submarine, which, with great skill and daring on the part of its commander penetrated the defenses of the strongly fortified British navy base at Scapa Flow, and sank the Royal Oak as she rode at anchor last Saturday morning, Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, told the Commons today, answering one riddle and posing another.

For while the first lord of the admiralty's statement gave the time and the place of the disaster in which more than 800 lives were lost, even he was at loss to explain the feat of the enemy submarine. How the undersea craft got within striking distance of a big battleship, he said, was a mystery the inquiry board was seeking to clear up now.

Sub Crew Decorated

What became of the submarine after it fired the salvo of torpedoes which spelled disaster to one of Great Britain's capital ships, was unknown, Churchill said, declaring that a search of the harbor failed to disclose a trace of it.

Meanwhile, there came from Berlin the announcement that the commander and crew of the submarine had been decorated for their feat.

Scapa Flow, where the Royal Oak was sent to the bottom at 1:30 a. m., October 14, is an expanse of water just south of the Orkney Islands, about 15 miles long, north

2-Alarm Clothing Store Fire Ties Up F St. at Dinner Hour

Firemen in gas masks fought for nearly an hour in heavy smoke before they gained control of a fire which caused "several thousand" dollars' damage in Herzog's clothing store at Ninth and F streets northwest late yesterday.

More than 1,000 persons watched as men of five engine and three truck companies, called by two alarms, fought the blaze. Street car service was blocked along F street and passengers bound for dinner joined the spectators.

Harry Darhanson, manager of the store, reported he smelled smoke and heard flames crackling shortly after the store had been closed. Three employes were in the store at the time.

When firemen arrived they found the blaze spreading through storage rooms above the main floor. They kept the flames from breaking through the ceiling to the upper floor show rooms of the Julius Lansburgh Furniture Co.

Seventh Battalion Chief F. G. Berry, in charge of the firefighting, said the blaze apparently had started from defective wiring. He placed the estimate on damage after inspecting the stock in the storage room and the interior of the store.

3 Kings and Finn President Meet Today at Stockholm

By Wade Werner,
Associated Press Staff Writer.

Stockholm, Oct. 17.—Heads of four northern states whose neutrality has been menaced by swift developments and complications in the European conflict will sit down together tomorrow and talk things over.

Emphasizing the importance of this meeting between Kings Haakon of Norway, Christian of Denmark, Gustaf of Sweden and President Kyoesti Kallio of Finland was the situation in Finland, where residents were leaving cities and troops were held in readiness in the face of Russian demands, as yet unpublished.

Despite the urgency of Finland's plight, however, official quarters here were discouraging the idea that tomorrow's meeting had any military significance. It asserted that the heads of the four northern countries and their foreign ministers were gathering to discuss neutrality problems arising from the war, but that the deliberations would be dominated by "the lodestar of neutrality."

(The presidents of all the American Republics were reported to have sent messages to King Gustaf of Sweden expressing their hopes for a successful outcome of the con-

Stronger Navy For U.S. Hinted By Roosevelt

President Indirectly Answers Query on Two-Ocean Fleet

By John G. Norris.

President Roosevelt indicated yesterday the Administration is giving consideration to a possible increase in the naval strength of the United States.

Asked at his press conference whether the United States needs a "two-ocean navy," as advocated in some Congressional circles, the President did not answer directly. He replied the Nation must have a Navy adequate for probable needs. He then went on to define "adequate" changes and that each year the Government must make new plans for its sea forces.

Inasmuch as the Navy last year embarked on a ten-year program to expand the fleet 20 per cent, an increase voted by Congress, the Chief Executive's statement was interpreted in many quarters as hinting at a possible further enlargement of the "first line of defense."

Defines Two-Ocean Navy

The President said the term "two-ocean navy" is a too simple way of expressing naval needs. Terming it a beautiful slogan, he stated that matters of strategy cannot be forecast and that no one knows whether America would keep one navy in each ocean or both in one ocean.

Naval authorities have said that the present Navy, even enlarged 20 per cent, could protect only one coast of the United States. Admiral William D. Leahy, then Chief of Naval Operations, told Congress a year ago the fleet would have to be doubled to provide simultaneous adequate protection of both coasts.

Acting Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison has said that two fleets are necessary for "a real job of national defense."

Edison Cites Weakness

"If we are attacked simultaneously on both shores," he told a Congressional committee, "the defense that we could put up with the fleet would necessarily have to be divided, and that would leave us as weak sisters in both oceans and an easy prey to any such combination of attack."

The cost of building a second armanda is estimated by the Navy Department as approximately $2,800,000,000. This does not include auxiliary ships, shore facilities or expanding shipbuilding yards to construct them. Existing yards are working almost at capacity at present.

Meanwhile, the War and Navy Departments issued a warning that a shortage of skilled workmen in many trades threatens the national defense program. Acting Secretary Edison and Assistant Secretary of War Louis Johnson, as joint chairmen of the Army and Navy Munitions Board, called upon industry to train more apprentices in skilled trades.

Program Being Prepared

They said their studies indicated that a continuation of the shortage of trained workmen may "seriously interfere with the existing procurement programs of the two services." An interdepartmental committee is preparing a long-range plan to meet the problem, it was said, but an immediate expansion of apprentice training is required.

President Roosevelt said the re-export of strategic war materials in recent weeks apparently had stopped since his warning against exporting such essential raw products. Asked about the matter at his press conference, he said he had received no complaints for a couple of weeks.

The President also said there was bound to be a deficiency estimate sumbitted to Congress in January to provide funds for the enlargement of the Army and Navy, ordered last month under declaration of a limited emergency.

Liberty Signers' Descendants to Meet on Oct. 28

Special Dispatch to The Post

Williamsburg, Va., Oct. 17.—Descendants of the signers of the Declaration of Independence will meet October 28 in the House of Burgesses Chamber in the restored Capitol at Williamsburg, Va. It was in this room in the original building that the first official action toward independence of the colonies was taken, when Richard Henry Lee on May 15, 1776, was empowered by the Virginia Convention of Delegates to vote for independence in the Continental Congress.

Following the meeting there will be a dinner at the Williamsburg Inn, and on Sunday the members and their guests will attend services at historic Bruton Church, the rector of which, the Rev. Francis H. Craighill, is chaplain general of the society. To qualify for membership one must be of direct lineal descent from a signer. The society has members in 35 States, the District of Columbia and in four foreign countries.

The Gallup Poll

86% of Americans Disagree With Hitler's Attitude That War Should Be Stopped

By Dr. George Gallup,

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 17.—Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag speech October 6, in which he said that since the Polish question was ended the Allies had no further reason for fighting Germany, did not settle Europe's war issue so far as American public opinion is concerned.

The overwhelming majority of voters in a fact finding survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion say they do not agree with the German government that the extinction of Poland removed the causes for war.

GEORGE GALLUP

The survey was begun immediately after Hitler's speech, and the interviewing was completed before Premier Daladier of France and Prime Minister Chamberlain of England had made their replies rejecting Hitler's peace terms. Throughout the United States interviewers for the Institute put this issue to a scientifically selected cross-section of all voters:

"Hitler says that the Polish question is settled and England and France have no reason to continue the war with Germany. Do you agree?"

Yes	14%
No	86

Approximately one voter in every 8 (13 per cent) had no opinion on the issue.

Disagreement is Uniform

The survey measures only the attitude toward Hitler's statement and is not a measurement of how many Americans want the war to continue or whether majority sentiment in this country believes England and France justified in continuing the war.

Disagreement with Hitler's statement runs uniformly through the various income groups, age levels and geographical areas in the Nation. The section most inclined to agree with the statement, according to the survey note, is New England, but even there only 20 per cent say they think there is no further cause for war, while 80 per cent disagree.

Hitlerism Called Issue

In explaining the reason for their attitude, voters who disagree with Hitler about the Polish question stress, chiefly, that other issues besides Poland are the important issues. They list "Hitlerism" as the main issue and add comments of which the following are typical: "Hitler cannot be trusted," "Hitler will always be a threat to the world peace," "Germany would like to make peace in order to make war later on."

Among those voters who think that the Allies have no cause now for fighting, the general tenor of sentiment is that the treaty of Versailles was so harsh on Germany that she is justified in trying to regain her place in the world, that it is better to let Hitler "get away" with a small land-grab than to plunge the world into war, and finally, that "England has been grabbing for the last thousand years and nobody has said anything."

Chest 'Big-Gift' Unit Sets Goal Of $521,000

Luncheon Launches Drive With Address By Brig. Gen. Hines

The Community Chest advanced (big gifts) unit, numbering 125 prominent Washingtonians, went into action yesterday with a goal of $521,000 following a luncheon at which it was told that the poor always will be with us, "but that nation is the happiest which has the fewest persons in that category."

The speaker, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, United States Veterans Administrator, added that solicitors can approach their prospects with the knowledge that they are selling good citizenship. "Any good citizen is bound to be interested," he told the group, which begins its activities well in advance of the main Chest drive—November 8-22.

Supplied With Names

The advanced gifts unit mainly is composed of such solicitors as have personal connection and contact with citizens financially able to contribute from $100 upward. These workers have been supplied with groups of names, and they will function with a wide individual initiative in seeking the large contributions. This particular phase of the Chest solicitation will be intensive. The field in which these solicitors can operate is greatly expanded this year.

Gen. Hines said "we cannot expect to be a happy Nation if we have a large group of underfed and underprivilged citizens." There is a responsibility in citizenship even beyond the duties at the ballot box, he said.

The workers were told that their best selling argument is the responsibility of the Community Chest—a great civic enterprise responsibly operated, whose total goal this year is $2,000,000.

National Guard Intensifies Drive

The District National Guard, out for 522 additional members, is intensifying its recruiting drive this week.

Capt. Lawrence W. Linderer, commander, Seventh Area Battery "B," will address the Southwest Citizens Association tonight. Col. Walter W. Burns, Commander of the 260th Coast Artillery, will speak Friday night to the Glover Park Citizens Association and later the Cooley-McCullough American Legion Post.

Maj. Sidney Morgan, of the State Staff, will speak on "The Militia at the Surrender of Yorktown" Saturday over WMAL in the hour arranged by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Young Democrats To Vote on Neutrality

A resolution indorsing the President's program on neutrality legislation will be introduced by the executive council of the Washington Young Democrats Club at a meeting of the club at 8 o'clock tonight in the Willard Hotel, it is announced by Charles Hanowell, president, and Harold W. Boone, vice president.

Agriculture and Industry Differ on Benefits Of Proposed Trade Treaty With Argentina

By the Associated Press

Agriculture and industry disagreed yesterday over the advisability of negotiating a reciprocal trade agreement with Argentina.

E. P. Thomas, of New York, representing the National Foreign Trade Council of New York, told the State Department's committee for reciprocity information the council had supported the trade-agreement program and regarded the Argentina agreement as the "culmination of efforts put forth in the last five years" to make the program a success.

"These trade agreements are the one piece of machinery by which we of the Western emisphere can gain solidarity and be united," he said.

Agricultural and live stock association representatives and members of Congress, however, told the committee negotiation of the agreement would seriously injure an already distressed agriculture here.

Retarding Influence Feared

Will J. Miller, representing the Kansas State Board of Agriculture and the Kansas Livestock Association of Topeka and the United States Live Stock Association of Kansas City, asserted any reduction of duties on meat products might retard the industry at a time it was becoming re-established.

William S. Culbertson, former Ambassador to Chile and former vice chairman of the tariff commission, testified representing the Rich Products Corporation of Rockford, Ill., which imports and distributes in this country, dog food packed in Argentina. He asserted the product from Argentina was made from clean, edible beef by-products.

Miller said Kansas farmers opposed any reduction in the duties on beef and beef products, wool, turkeys, eggs, dairy products, corn, flax and alfalfa. He said the farmers of the country desired to co-operate with industry but contended industry should make it easy for them by helping to remove those things which injure agriculture.

Representative Murdock (Democrat), of Arizona, mentioned the Argentine agreement in the House yesterday when he asserted livestock interests feared the effect of the proposed agreement.

Carson Indorses Treaty

"I believe that trade agreements can promote peace and goodwill," the Arizonan said, "but not if we permit our capital to go into other countries and exploit cheap labor there to sell in our market."

James D. Carson, of the Argentine-American Chamber of Commerce, New York, indorsed the proposed treaty. He told of a great road program under way in Argentina and added:

"It would be a fine thing to see American cars on those roads."

Defending a proposed reduction of 50 per cent in tariff rates on agricultural by-products used in the manufacture of paints, Carson declared that farmers would be benefited in the lessened cost of paints.

Representative Cleveng-er (Republican), of Ohio, described the plight of farmers in Ohio and of the reverses they had suffered in recent years, then added:

"For God's sake don't deluge them under a flood of Argentine beef and other products. Let's don't make it any harder for them to exist."

Surgeon Finds Foods Usable As Medicines

Vitains and Proteins Substitute for Drugs, Stnaford Doctor Says

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Oct. 17.—Discovery during surgery that certain foods containing vitamins and protein substitute for medicines and drugs was reported to the American College of Surgeons today.

Patients were described by Dr. Emile Holman, professor of surgery at Stanford University.

For several days before and after operations, patients were given diet high in vitamins, proteins and vitamin concentrates.

Vitamin C, it was found, stimulates production of the "cement" substance in human tieues known as collagen, a gelatinous material and apparently speeded healing of wounds.

Vitamin A, Dr. Holman said, is found to strengthen the epithelial tissues, which are the coverage of all surfaces. Vitamin B stimulates growth of the tissues after surgery. It also has general effects such as preventing constipation and muscular weakness. It helps to build red blood cells.

Medical Body Attacks

Pittsburgh, Oct. 17 (AP).—A national health program which would give medical aid to all the people instead of the "relief" program for the submerged third of the population was advocated today by Dr. Edward S. Godfrey, new president of the American Public Health Association.

The health problem today is not one of "treating an individual and sending him back to the same environment," said Dr. Godfrey, who is commissioner of health for New York State. "It is a problem of both treatment and prevention of disease, together with the eradication of conditions which breed disease."

He attacked the American Medical Association directly for its "incomplete and distorted information" on the national health program; criticized recent consolidation of Government agencies into the Federal Security Administration, and assailed proposals under the Wagner health act to consolidate health service functions.

5,000,000 Ill Daily

Chicago, Oct. 17 (AP).—Miss Josephine Roche, chairman of the Federal Interdepartmental Committee on Health and Welfare, estimated tonight that 5,000,000 persons were on the Nation's average daily sick list.

"The Nation's bill for sickness and postpossble death amounts annually to about $10,000,000,000, including the costs of medical and health services, the loss of wages due to illness and the loss of potential future earning power because of premature death," she said, advocating a national health program such as that proposed in the pending Wagner national health bill.

Mary Beard Speaks

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 17 (AP).—Miss Mary Beard, national director of the American Red Cross Nursing Service, cited tonight a "growing belief" that State health departments should administer "the provisions of the national health program enacted into law."

Addressing the New York State Nurses Association, she pointed out that "great voluntary associations have stated their belief that a single agency, that is the State department of health, should be responsible administratively for the provisions of the national health program enacted into law."

Stringfellow Barr, president of St. John's College, Annapolis, Md., prophesied "that this country will either restore the liberal education which its so called liberal colleges no longer furnish, or else this country will sacrifice its liberal institutions."

Fine Arts Body To Meet Friday

H. P. Caemmerer, secretary, yesterday announced the Commission of Fine Arts will meet Friday to study designs for the National Guard Armory, structures to be erected at Washington National Airport (Gravelly Point), and the new Lafayette office building.

The last named project falls within jurisdiction of the Shipstead-Luce act, which provides that plans for buildings, whether public or private, abutting certain parks and squares must be approved by the Fine Arts Commission. The H street side of the Lafayette building faces the park of the same name.

Jury Convicts 5 In WPA Riots At Minneapolis

3 Others Are Freed In First Trial of 150 Under Indictment

By the Associated Press

Minneapolis, Oct. 17.—A Federal district court jury today convicted five of the first eight men to be tried as an outgrowth of disorders during the WPA strike last July. The jury acquitted one and the court directed verdicts of innocent for two others.

The eight were among more than 150 indicted on charges of conspiracy to violate the Federal relief act by interfering with those who wished to work during the strike.

During a week of riotous demonstrations against new wage-and-hour provisions of the relief act, a striker was shot to death, a policeman died from heart disease after doing riot duty, and more than a score were injured. Most of the casualties occurred July 14 in a fight at the scene of a sewing project.

The first eight to be tried were indicted in connection with a disturbance at a WPA project on the University of Minnesota campus, during which several suffered slight stab wounds.

The five convicted were Earl Pemble, Myron Phillips, Richard Connell, Ben Palmer and Leslie Wachter. Directed verdicts of innocence were ordered for John Marshall and Gordon T. Smith. The jurors acquitted Arnold Mullen.

The court deferred sentence indefinitely, giving the defense until November 4 to file motions.

District Radio Club To Police Itself

The Washington Radio Club, recognizing the international situation, has established a code of conduct with which to police its activities. The code cautions the radio amateur:

Confine all international contacts strictly to discussions of experiments and small talk. Avoid reference to anything which may have possible military significance. Transmit no information of an unneutral nature. Refrain from expressing over the air personal views of international events. Use no foreign language or code. Caution all amateurs who are observed violating any of the rules.

"Restrictive regulation of amateurs by several neutral countries is indicative of the possible revisions of regulations which may become necessary here," said the club's announcement.

Byrd and Party to Explore 1,000 Miles of Unknown Coast

Antarctic Expedition to Leave America Early in November, With Supplies to Be Landed in Polar Areas Before Refueling

By the Associated Press

Boston, Oct. 17.—A "mystery coastline" in the Antarctic—1,000 miles of gale-swept territory still uncharted and never seen—will be attacked this winter by two wooden ships commanded by Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd.

It is the coast bounding the ice continent from an explored point 600 miles due south of Cape Horn to a westward point in Marie Byrd Land, which Byrd charted in previous expeditions.

An official of the expedition said today that landng of men to establish a base near the eastern extremity of the unknown coast, together with coastwise and interior exploration of territory lying between the known points, will be one of the man objectives of the Government's exploratory and scientific venture to the bottom of the world.

The two ships of the expedition—the nearly arrived motorship North Star and the barkentine Bear—will leave Boston on November 4 and 10, respectively, heading first for the proposed "west base" at or near Little America, with refueling at New Zealand.

After partial unloading on the ice at Little America early in January, they will go to Valparaiso for another refueling before ploughing south again.

Their objective then, said Roger Hawthorne, assistant field representative of the Antarctic Service, will be "somewhere on that unknown coast, we don't know exactly where."

Stephenson, Klan Leader, Is Denied New Trial Plea

Noblesville, Ind., Oct. 17 (AP).—Circuit Judge Cassius M. Gentry today denied the plea of D. C. Stephenson, Indiana political power in the heyday of the Ku Klus Klan, for a new trial in the death of Madge Oberholtzer in 1925.

Stephenson, convicted here 15 years ago of second degre murder and sentenced to life imprisonment in connection with the death of Miss Oberholtzer, a statehouse stenographer, contended in a hearing October 5 and 6 that the jury's verdict was "void" because the indictment charged first degree murder.

Judge Gentry accepted the State's view that the legal points raised by Stephenson already had been disposed of in the State supreme court and were not subject to review here.

They are Naomi Cowan, 15, of Capitol Heights, and Dorothy Clements, 14, of Hillside, third-year students.

Their parents said they did not believe the girls could have run away because they had only $3.30.

John T. Cowan said his daughter was 5 feet 11 inches tall, weighed 100 pounds and had dark hair and brown eyes. She wore a black dress trimmed in red, a short gray tweed coat and black shoes.

Dorothy Clements was described as 5 feet 4 inches tall, weighing 120 pounds, with blue eyes and black hair. She was wearing a blue jacket, white tam, olive green skirt, white blouse, white sweater and black shoes.

Woman's Bureau Personnel Limit Lifted

On recommendation by Police Chief Brown, the Commissioners yesterday lifted the restriction on the limit of personnel in the Women's Bureau.

For the last 18 years the personnel has been limited to 23 employes. When the bureau was authorized by Congress in 1918, the limit was 20. The Commissioners said they felt the bureau should be placed on the same status as the Detective Bureau and any of the precincts, where personnel is determined by the need and budget.

says "last evening the Germans launched a second attack, again strongly supported by artillery in the region east of the Saar River on a front about 20 miles wide.

"Our light observation posts retired, fighting as they went in accordance with their instructions. Our fire halted the enemy on a prearranged line.

"In preparation for this German offensive the French high command more than two weeks ago had decided to bring back to other positions those French divisions which had assumed the offensive on German territory in order to relieve the Polish armies indirectly. The entire movements, thus necessary, had been completed October 3. Since that date our troops in contact with the enemy consisted of light observation elements together with some supporting units."

Thus the French high command changed its original plans when it became evident Polish resistance had definitely ended.

It was decided then to fight a defensive battle only, leaving the enemy to take the initiative.

The defensive line of resistance utilizes all the possible natural obstacles, streams, hills and woods. It has been consolidated during the last two weeks. It has been prepared at variable distances behind outposts with the object of obtaining an interlocking fire. There has been time also to measure carefully all the ranges both for the artillery and automatic weapons. Moreover the ground between the two lines has been strewn with landmines and other traps, which fact serves to explain the absence of tanks in yesterday's offensives.

A defensive battle especially in the conditions prevailing between the Rhine and the Moselle offers several advantages. For one thing an assailant is almost certain to suffer heavy losses: For another thing there is the possibility of resorting to counterattack when he is brought to a standstill.

New Assault Expected

Yesterday after fairly long and intense artillery preparation with guns of all calibers, the German infantry went over the top. The French observation posts immediately signaled the movement and the French artillery came into action with a heavy fire. The outposts fell back, fighting as they went, and led the enemy within range of automatic weapons mounted on the line of resistance. In such attacks there comes a moment when the attacking infantry must halt to seek cover or dig in. It came yesterday when night fell.

This morning the respective positions remained unchanged. There was no general action on the German side although there were many localized infantry skirmishes. Meantime it is to be presumed that reinforcements are being brought up in preparation for the next phase.

Nazi Ship's Capture Reported

The French communique, No 88 this evening read:

"Local actions on the entire front, which remains unchanged since this morning despite sharp infantry engagements at certain points.

"A German freighter has been captured by our warships cruising in the Atlantic."

The German force engaged in this attack can only be guessed. The French Field Manual prescribes that for an offensive battle, a division front should approximate 2 miles. On this basis the Germans should have employed 12 divisions altogether for the morning and the evening operations. It is reliably reported, however, they used no more than seven or eight which seems rather small especially in view of the fact that no tanks accompanied the infantry.

Blow May Be a Feint

In the Moselle-Saar sector, where the morning attack occurred, the Westwall abuts on the second of these rivers. Consequently the French had advanced farther north on their right than on their felt. As a result the enemy offensive had been to rectify the line and to bring it back toward the frontier. In this vicinity, the stream flows in a deep valley, so that the fire from the French line of resistance can converge on any troops coming down the opposite slope in full view.

But all this has not yet revealed the German plan. It is only the preliminary phase. There is nothing to prove that yesterday's attacks, especially in view of the fact that the German forces were relatively small in comparison with the length of the front, are not intended to induce the French high command to concentrate reserves in the proximity of the Maginot Line whereafter another and heavier blow may be dealt elsewhere.

The fact that the French deemed it opportune to blow up the Rhine bridges last week seems to indicate that something was preparing on the German side of the river. Col. Gen. Wilhelm Keitel is reputed here as a great believer in Schlieffen's doctrine of envelopment. If that should be his plan he is likely to hurry matters now, otherwise the weather might turn against him.

Generalissimo Gamelin came to Paris this afternoon to report to Premier Daladier on the situation.

Railway Parley Planned

Berlin, Oct. 17 (AP).—The semi-official commentary Dienst aus Deutschland said today a railway conference among Germany, Soviet Russia and the Baltic states would be held soon in order to reorganize transportation facilities in eastern Europe.

This is especially important to Berlin and Moscow because of economic negotiations aiming at an increase in German-Soviet trade to 10 to 15 times that of last year.

The weekly newspaper Voelkischer Wille, commenting on repatriation negotiations at Moscow, said 900,000 Germans now live in Russia.

It said there were roughly, 400,000 so-called "Volga Germans" and a equal number of Germans settled in the Ukraine as farmers. The others were said to be centered at Sarepta and in the Crimea.

The emigration of Germans, especially from southern Germany, started in the eighteenth century. In 1914 an estimated 2,400,000 Germans lived in Russia, but through cession of Russian territory after the war and for other reasons the figure dwindled. In 1926 there still were more than 1,000,000 Germans living in Russia.

Geneva, Oct. 17 (AP).—International Red Cross officials received a report today that 100,000 Polish refugees from regions occupied by Russia are making their way to Wilno, now under Lithuanian rule. It is investigating to ascertain what help may be needed.

British, French Convinced U. S. Won't Send Troops, Says Gibson, Arriving on Cunarder

Samaria Followed Unknown Course With 1,079 Aboard

Copyright by New York Times,

New York, Oct. 17.—The Cunard White Star Line's Samaria arrived here today with 1,079 passengers. She left Liverpool October 7, and except for zig-zagging and blackouts at night, her voyage was uneventful, according to passengers.

Hugh Gibson, former United States Ambassador to Belgium, one of the 259 Americans on board, said that "no one had the foggiest idea" of the course the ship had taken.

"We might have gone down to the Azores or up to the coast of Greenland, for all we know, because we had extremes both of hot and cold weather."

Gibson "Guesses" on Allies

The European situation is "mostly a series of question marks for which nobody seems to know the answers," Gibson said. "There never was a war in which there was so much uncertainty as to where, and how, and when."

"My guess is that the Allies can win," he said, "what with their strength and Germany's weaknesses, but that is just a guess." Germany's weaknesses, he explained, were food rationing, lack of oil and undigested minority groups.

The Russo-German Treaty, he said, must have come as a great "jolt" to the German populace.

British "Grim as Hell"

"Day after day they have had hammered at them that communism was the great menace to civilization and any sacrifice was justified to carry out their great mission. A lot of people closed their eyes with the thought that Hitler was leading the world in the fight against communism and this has come to them as a pretty bad shock, I am sure."

Gibson said the British people were "grim as hell. They all know they are in for a hard time, but you don't find anyone who wants to compromise."

He told the story of a British lady in a bus. She said, "I do wish that Herr Hitler would marry and settle down."

They Don't Count on U. S.

British public opinion concerning America's entry into the war is "extremely objective," Gibson said.

Both the English and the French people just assume as a matter of course, he said, that America will send no expeditionary force to this conflict.

Spain is, and will remain, definitely neutral "because they have all they can do to repair the damage of their own war," Gibson said and expressed the opinion that Italy desires above all else to stay out of the war. Whether she will succeed is a question.

European opinion is rankled, Gibson said, because American news about the European situation is so much more complete than anything available there. In England, he said, thousands tune in on the American news broadcasts.

3 Kings Meet At Stockholm

ference, the United Press reported from Buenos Aires, Editor's Note.)

On the eve of the meeting the Swedish National League of Youth submitted to King Gustaf a petition urging him to invite the heads of the great powers to "take the initiative" which would bring those at war to a conference table.

The League of Youth is one of the smallest political parties in Sweden, but lately has been increasing in strength. It is ultra-conservative.

Emphasizing the unmilitary character of tomorrow's conference, there was complete lack of military pomp and display in the welcoming ceremony planned for the visitors.

King Gustaf will go to the airport early tomorrow to meet President Kallio, then to the railway station to meet Kings Christian and Haakon. In the evening the three Kings and President Kallio will attend a special service in the Storkyran—Royal Church—and at 9:45 massed choirs will march to the festively illuminated palace to write the city's welcome in song.

Although there will be no military parade, the thought of the war's menace to all northern countries—not only to Finland—was constantly in the background.

Precautionary preparations were announced for an exodus of Stockholm's children. The plans were purely precautionary, similar to those already announced for Copenhagen.

Reports from Berlin that the Swedish Explorer Sven Hedin had conferred with Adolf Hitler were described as of no official significance. Hedin was a frequent visitor to Germany, it was pointed out, but his relations with German leaders were purely personal. A suggestion that his visit was sponsored by King Gustaf was emphatically rejected, as were suggestions that the northern countries' conference might pave the way for a peace appeal to belligerent powers.

Unofficially, however, such suggestions were voiced by the newspapers Aftonbladet in Stockholm and Aftenposten in Oslo.

In the absence of any definite description of Moscow's demands on Finland responsible commentators here were venturing no predictions as to what Sweden would do in case Finland had to fight.

Red Alliance Bid Rumored

Copyright by New York Times,

Helsinki, Finland, Oct. 17.—Cabinet deliberations on Finnish-Soviet problems continued today, Juho K. Paasikivi, head of the delegation to Moscow, going into details to enable Foreign Minister Erkko to present a complete statement of the Finnish standpoint at the Stockholm conference tomorrow. During Erkko's absence consultations will proceed here on technical questions.

While it is again admitted in official quarters that differences of opinion exist and that some questions are of a "serious character," it is re-emphasized that the Russian leaders expressed no desire to rush negotiations and the Finnish delegation therefore is expected to have ample time to prepare material for the next talks in Moscow.

There are insistent rumors of an alleged Soviet request for military alliance and for control of certain islands in the Gulf of Finland.

British Envoy Describes Last Days of Peace

Ribbentrop Misled Hitler, Henderson Says in White Paper

after all have postponed the disaster for a week."

Sir Nevile continued that it might well have been Prime Minister Chamberlain's letter which gave Hitler "one last hesitation" and caused him to countermand the orders to his army to march.

"But it was not the horrors of war which determined him," the British diplomat asserted. "His hesitation was due rather to one final effort to detach Britain from Poland."

Recounting with colorful descriptive touches some of the exchanges detailed in the Blue Book Britain published September 21, Sir Nevile said Hitler was "frendly and reasonable" on August 28 but was "far less reasonable" on the following day.

"I was therefore somewhat disappointed," Sir Nevile wrote.

"I would mention incidentally," he added, that on both occasions "nothing was left undone to enhance the solemnity of the occasion.

"A considerable but quite expressionless crowd was waiting outside the chancellery and a guard of honor awaited me in the courtyard of the mainentrance.

"In view of what has been reported to the contrary, I desire to bear witness here to the fact that throughout the whole of these anxious weeks neither I nor my staff received anything but the utmost courtesy and civility from all Germans, except on one occasion"—his final interview with German Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop, whim he described as showing "intense hostility."

"He kept leaping from his chair in a state of great excitement and asking if I had anything more to say," Sir Nevile recounted.

"I kept replying that I had, and if my own atitude was no less unfriendly than his own, I cannot but say, in all sincerity, that I had every justification for it.

Ribbentrop as "Bismarck"

"When I told him that I would not fail to report his comments and remarks to my government, he calmed down a little and said that they were his own, and that it was for Herr Hitler to decide."

Henderson said he believed Hitler had come to consider Von Ribbentrop "a second Bismarck," and that the Nazi foreign minister "probably shared" the opinion.

"There were, in fact, for Herr Hitler only two solutions," he declared:

"The use of force,or the achievement of his aims by the display of force.

"'If you wish to obtain your objective by force, you must be strong; if you wish to obtain them by negotiation, you must be stronger still.' That was a remark which he (Hitler) made to a foreign statesman who visited him this year, and it expresses in the concisest form the Hitler technique."

Germans Tired of Crisis

Sir Nevile declared Hitler was not bluffing before the Munich conference last year or in September of this year.

"Up to the middle of August this year the fear of a war on two fronts, with Russia hostile or at least unfriendly, might possibly have deterred him and his military advisers from action against Poland," the diplomat said.

A bloodless victory would have brought additional prestige, Sir Nevile went on, "but it would only have been to start again, once the world had recovered from the shock. Even his own people were beginning to be tired of these repeated crises.

"Millions of Germans had begun to long for a more peaceful existence. Guns instead of butter were becoming more and more unpopular except with the younger generation, and Hitler may well have wondered what might happen in his Nazi revolution if its momentum were allowed to stop.

An Explosion Due

"Moreover the financial and economic position of Germany was such that things could scarcely continue as they were without some form of explosion, internal or external.

"Of the two alternatives the most attractive, from the point of view of his griwing personal ambitions and those of the clique nearest to him, was war.

"It is scarcely credible that he would have acted as he did if bloody war, rather than a bloodless victory, had not seemed a fairer prospect for him.

"He had always meant to teach the Poles a lesson for what he regarded as their base ingratitude in refusing the 'generous' demands which he had made ti them in March."

Sir Neville said that "one of Hitler's greatest drawbacks is that except for two official visits to Italy he has never traveled abroad. For his knowledge of British mentality he consequently relied on Von Ribbentrop . . . If report be true Von Ribbentrop gave him cinsistently false counsels in regard to England. . . .

"Even the most absolute dictator is susceptible to the influence of his surroundings. Nevertheless, Hitler's decisions, his calculations and his opportunisms were his own.

"As Goering once said to me: 'When a decision had to be taken none of us can count more than the stones on which we are standing; it is the Fuehrer alone who decides.'

"If anything did count it was the opinion of his military advisers. . . . The army grudged him even a week between the twenty-fifth of August and first of September which his last attempt to secure British neutrality or at least goodwill had cost it.

"Yet even so the advice of his soldiers was probably merely cover for the prosecution of Hitler's own plans. His impatience and precipitate action on that last day of August can scarcely have been other than premeditated.

Admits Hitler's Talents

"The Russian pact appeared to give him the advantage which he was seeking and thereafter there was no time to lose if mud were not to be added to Poland's allies."

Henderson prefaced his report with the remark that "events moved with such rapidity during the last fortnight of my mission to Berlin that it proved impossible at the time to give any consecutive account of them. . . .

"Herr Hitler and national socialism are the products of the defeat of a great nation in war and its reaction against the confusion and distress which followed it. It would be idle to deny the great achievements of the man who restored to the German nation its self-respect and its disciplined orderliness.

"The tyrannical methods which were employed within Germany itself to obtain this result were detestable but were German's own concern."

Reforms Democratic

"Many of Herr Hitler's social reforms, in spite of their complete disregard of personal liberty, of thought, word or deed, were on which Herr Hitler employed to precipitate an incorporation which would probably have peacefully come in due course of its own volition and in accordance with the established principle of self-determination.

History Will Tell

"Yet even those methods might have been endured in a world which had experienced 1914-1918 and which sought peace as an end in itself. If Herr Hitler had been willing to accord to others the rights which he claimed for Germany.

"Revolutions are like avalanches. History alone will determine whether Herr Hitler could have diverted Naziism into normal channels, whether he was the victim of the movement which he had initiated, or whether it was his own megalomania which drove it beyond the limits which civilization was prepared to tolerate."

highly advanced democratic lines. The 'Strength Through Joy' movement, the care of the physical fitness of the nation and above all the organization of the labor camps, an idea which Herr Hitler once told me that he had borrowed from Bulgaria, are typical examples of a benevolent dictatorship.

"It was not the incorporation of Austria and the Sudeten Germans in the Reich which so much shocked public opinion in the world as the unscrupulous and hateful methods

German strategy. To this end she was sending her planes across 400 and 500 miles of open sea.

Her U-boats were entering British harbors and attacking British warships lying at anchor. It was doubtful whether the German people will ever know the sacrifices involved in this daring determination.

Nazis Deny Losses

Certainly these sacrifices—beyond the insignificant number of planes—were not reported here. It was denied Germany lost any submarines in the attack at Scapa Flow.

Announcement by the victorious German U-boat that she had sunk the Royal Oak, and torpedoed the Repulse in the Bay of Scapa Flow occasioned a huge sensation in Berlin.

The German air attack on Firth of Forth and Scapa Flow was apparently carried through with ridiculous ease, aided by an apparent ineffectiveness of British defense. The German planes, judging from the local press reports, apparently were practically immune to anti-aircraft shells in the attack on Firth. They flew so low one passed underneath the bridge spanning Firth of Forth and others reported seeing the population standing on the banks waving at them, it was reported here.

The Germans reported taking photographs showing smoke and flames rising from the stricken ships.

Five enemy airplanes, two British, were shot down over German territory yesterday, it was reported from the Western Front. The localities of the air fights were not given.

Jews Supplant Reds as Foes of Anti-Comintern

Enemies Substituted, Organization Continues, Its Editors Assert

By Joseph Barnes.

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Berlin, Oct. 17.—The Anti-Comintern, the Nazi organization which has claimed for several years to be the general staff headquarters of the world campaign against Communism, will continue to function in the future, it was learned here tonight, but instead of the Communists its enemies will now be the Jews.

Its chief publication, recently called the "Contra-Comintern," will appear next month under a new title, which has not yet been announced, but a letter from the editors stated today that they had discovered Germany's real enemies to be not Bolsheviks, but Jews.

"Behind all the enemies of Germany's rise," according to the letter, "stands those who demand our encirclement, the oldest enemies of the German people, and of all healthy ascendant nations—the Jews."

Communism Not Mentioned

Neither Communism nor the Soviet Union was mentioned once in the letter. It stated that the editors were "authorized to declare that the support of highest government circles has been assured for the organization in the same way, and in the same degree, as it has been supported in the past."

It pledged its still untitled magazine "to lead our foreign friends and co-workers in the service of this common goal."

The last issue of the Contra-Comintern appeared in August, just before Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop's first visit to Moscow. It was circulated in an edition of 83,000 copies. Its leading article on "The Bolshevik Offensive Against the World" was a bitter attack against western countries which, by seeking a military alliance with the Russians, were threatening to let communism penetrate into western Europe.

Marcantonio Denies Communists Control ILD; Ex-Party Leader Says 3 Top Officers Are Reds

Gitlow Also Tells Dies 17 of 58 Directors Are Members

By John B. Oakes.

Representative Marcantonio, of New York, the one-man Congressional delegation of the American Labor Party, lectured to the Dies committee yesterday on democracy, and denied that the International Labor Defense is controlled by Communists.

The Representative, who is president of the I. L. D., insisted the I. L. D. would defend victims of Communist persecution as willingly as victims of fascism, if the occasion arose.

Following Marcantonio to the stand came Ben Gitlow, deposed general secretary of the American Communist Party, who offered testimony contradicting the New York Representative.

Gitlow, who said he had been one of the founders of the I. L. D. in 1925, renewed the charge of communism against the organization and stated that three of its four top officers and at least 17 of its 58 directors are members of the Communist Party.

Says Communists Dominate Unions

The former Communist leader then told the committee the Communist Party "completely" dominates the American Communications Association (C. I. O. union of radiomen and telegraphers) and the National Maritime Union (C. I. O.), with potentially disastrous results for the national defense.

Gitlow wound up his testimony by branding the party that once claimed his loyalty as a "corroding, corrupting, sinister" influence which is "in no measure a legitimate politician Dies appeared to agree.

Meanwhile Dies revealed that the committee is "continuing to receive important information" on alleged Communist activities in the Washington Navy Yard, but he refused to give further details.

And on the floor of the House, Representative Dickstein (Democrat), of New York, who a few years ago headed a red-hunting committee himself, denounced Gen. Walter Krivitsky, one of Dies' star witnesses, as "nothing but a phoney."

BENJAMIN GITLOW
Traces ILD to Communists

Fully Responsible Since 1937

Marcantonio said he took full responsibility for the I. L. D. since 1937, when he became president. He said that at that time he "ascertained that the I. L. D. was "definitely not connected with the Communist Party."

He admitted that two of the organization's four officers, William L. Patterson, vice chairman, and Anna Damon, secretary, are Communists, but denied that Robert W. Dunn, treasurer, is a party member. Later, Gitlow declared Dunn is a "secret member" of the party.

Pointing out that the I. L. D. constitution "specifically condemns fascism, but fails to mention that other form of fascism—Soviet fascism," Dies asked if Marcantonio defends Stalin's dictatorship.

"I'm opposed to all dictatorships, including Stalin's," answered Marcantonio, "but an American citizen has the right to advocate that dictatorship as long as his activities come within Constitutional limits—and when we try to stop him we are undermining our own democratic institutions."

"But advocacy of a Communist or Fascist economic philosophy is a totally different thing from approving a closely regimented organization dominated by the German or Russian government," protested Representative Voorhis (Democrat), one of the most pronounced New Deal liberals.

Called Moscow Agency

Earlier in the day, Voorhis had issued a statement declaring that it was apparent from committee evidence that the German-American Bund and the Communist Party are agents of Hitler and Stalin "in a very real sense."

Gitlow, who had been before the committee previously, said the 17 "Communist" directors of the I. L. D. include Rockwell Kent, noted artist. Of the 17 individuals, Marcantonio later denied that five, including Kent, are Communists.

Asserting that Marcantonio "either doesn't know or doesn't want to disclose what he knows," Gitlow cited Communist Party minutes to show that "the executive committee of the Communist Party decided who the officers of the ILD should be."

"The ILD is a section, to this very day, of the International Red Aid in Moscow," charged Gitlow. "Every secretary of the ILD has been a member of the Communist Party in good standing," he declared.

The American League for Peace and Democracy announced yesterday that it had advised its branches throughout the country "to resist with legal force, if necessary, illegal encroachment upon civil rights by agents of the Dies Committee."

to south, and 8 miles across from east to west.

It is reached from the Atlantic by a passage 2 miles wide and 7 miles long through the Hoy Sound. From the North Sea there is a passage 2 miles wide, 3½ miles long, through Hoy Second. The submarine had to run a gauntlet of defenses through either of these passages.

Churchill said that "necessary measures were being taken to increase precautions which in the last war proved effectual."

An inquiry which is sitting will not take long and I should like to have the advantage of reading its report before I go into details . . ." on the attack, Churchill said, promising to answer further questions when the inquiry was completed.

Describing the disaster, Churchill used blunt language. The members commended him for not mincing his words and for the promptness with which bad news, along with good, was made public by the admiralty. However, in reciting details of the disaster, Churchcill pointed out that "all losses are not on our side."

Claims Third of Subs Sunk

Since the war began it would be conservative, he said, to estimate the number of submarines destroyed at 13. Five others he was sure had been seriously damaged without attempting to speak for the French navy which was also active.

Out of 60 submarines ready for action at the war's outbreak, he estimated that one-third had been sunk or seriously damaged. He estimated that one-fifth of the largest ocean-going type was out of commission. He closed his grim report of the loss of the Royal Oak with these words:

"There is, of course, a most effective control over all contraband and all commerce entering Germany. The North Sea is controlled effectually so they can derive no advantage whatever from ocean-going commerce."

Churchill's report revealed that the Royal Oak was lying at anchor in Scapa Flow at the extreme end of the harbor, far from the other ships. This, he said, accounted for the heavy loss of life as many were drowned before help arrived. It was probable, Churchill said, that the submarine, after miraculously avoiding the net barrages and fighting through unfavorable currents, fired a salvo at the Royal Oak. He expressed the opinion that only one of these torpedoes hit the target, and near the bow, for there was a muffled explosion which was attributed by the crew to an internal cause. Continuing his recital of the disaster, Churchill said:

"Twenty minutes later, the U-boat fired three or four torpedoes and, these striking in quick succession, caused the ship to capsize and sink."

The boy's wound was not discovered until he had walked several hundred yards to an automobile with his father.

Churchill's Statement on Royal Oak Sinking

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 17.—The text of the report by Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, and Lord Chatfield on the sinking of the Royal Oak follows:

The battleship Royal Oak was sunk at anchor by a U-boat in Scapa Flow approximately at 1:30 a.m. (7:30 p. m. E. S. T.) on the 14th instant. It still is a matter of conjecture how the U-boat penetrated the defenses of the harbor.

When we consider that during the whole course of the last war this anchorage was found to be immune from such attacks, on account of the obstacles imposed by the currents and the net barrages, this entry of a U-boat must be considered as a remarkable exploit of professional skill and daring.

A board of inquiry is now sitting at Scapa Flow to report upon all that occurred, and anything that I say must be subject to revision in the light of their conclusions. It appears probable that the U-boat fired a salvo of torpedoes at the Royal Oak, of which only one hit the bow. This muffled explosion was, at the time, attributed to internal causes, and what is called the inflammable store, where the kerosene and other such materials are kept, was flooded.

Twenty minutes later the U-boat fired three or four torpedoes, and these, striking in quick succession, caused the ship to capsize and sink. She was lying at the extreme end of the harbor and therefore many officers and men were drowned before a rescue could be organized from other vessels. The lists of survivors have already been made public, and I deeply regret to inform the House that upwards of 800 officers and men have lost their lives.

The admiralty immediately announced the loss of this fine ship.

Serious as this loss is it does not affect the margin of security in heavy vessels, which remains ample.

Meanwhile, an intensive search of the anchorage has not yet yielded any results. It is clear, however, that after a certain time, the harbor can be pronounced clear, as any U-boat would have to rise to the surface for air or perish.

All necessary measures are being taken to increase the precautions which, in the late war, proved effectual.

For the rest I must await the report of the board which is now examining the events in full technical detail.

Toward the end of last week the U-boat warfare, which had for a fortnight, been mainly directed upon neutrals, became again intensified.

Four ships, including two French ships, were sunk upon the western approaches during Saturday and Sunday, and three others were attacked but made their escape.

The British ships sunk aggregated 13,000 tons. On the other hand, it should not be supposed that all the losses are upon one side.

The admiralty has hitherto refrained from giving the figures of the slaughter of U-boats which has been proceeding and is still proceeding with increasing severity.

On Friday last, for instance, four U-boats were certainly destroyed, including two of the largest and latest ocean-going U-boats in the German navy.

Nothing like this rate of destruction was attained at any moment in the last war. During the last week for which I can give figures, that is to say, to the end of the sixth week of the war, seven U-boats were sunk. If we look back over the whole period of six weeks since the war began, we may estimate that 13 U-boats have been sunk, that 5 have been seriously damaged and possibly sunk, and several others damaged.

French Navy Also Active

These figures are probably an understatement. Besides this, two-thirds of the U-boats which have been out raiding have suffered attack from depth charges. The French navy, which is powerful and in the highest state of efficiency, has also been active and has certainly taken its toll, but it is not for me to give figures upon this subject. We believe, therefore, that out of about 60 U-boats ready for action at the beginning of the war, about one-third have already been sunk or seriously damaged and of the largest and latest ocean-going U-boats, the proportion is at least one-fifth.

We actually hold survivors from the crews of three vesels of this highest class. We must thus take stock of the general position reached in the first six weeks of the U-boat war against British commerce. Something from a third to a quarter of the total U-boat fleet of Germany has been destroyed and the gaps made in the skilled officers and crews cannot be speedily replaced.

On the other hand, the British mercantile marine of 21,000,000 tons has experienced a loss of 156,000 tons by U-boat action, to which may be added 18,000 tons through mines or accidents—total 174,000 tons.

During the same period we have captured from the enemy 20,000 tons and have been refreshed by the arrival of new ships amounting to 104,000 tons.

It will be seen therefore that while our mercantile marine remains practically unaffected by the U-boat warfare, losses have been inflicted upon the enemy which, if continued, would certainly not be endured.

I cannot close my examination of the first phase of this severe sea struggle without inviting the House to realize the intensity of the effort and devotion which has been required from all the ever-increasing hunting craft, and from those engaged upon convoy not only in narrow waters but amid the storms of the ocean and the constancy of the merchant officers and seamen who face all the hazards with buoyant and confident determination.

Scotch Raid Described

The text of identical statements made today by Lord Chatfield and Prime Minister Chamberlain follows:

The House will wish to have an account of the series of air raids which took place in the Firth of Forth area yesterday afternoon in the light of the information now available.

The air raid was carried out by 12 or possibly more aircraft in waves of two or three at a time. Two civilians were slightly injured by shell fragments. Damage to civilian property was negligible. Naval casualties were caused on H. M. S. Southampton, Edinburgh and Mohawk.

I regret to say that altogether 3 officers and 13 ratings (enlisted men) were killed or died of wounds, that two officers were slightly injured, that 11 ratings were seriously injured and 31 slightly injured.

The damage to H. M. S Southampton and H. M. S. Edinburgh was slight and both vessels are ready for sea. The damage to H. M. S. Mohawk is superficial. The enemy were at once engaged by our fighter squadrons and by anti-aircraft fire. Four enemy bombers were brought down, of which one was shot down by gunfire. In addition a number of other enemy aircraft were heavily engaged and some of these may not have been able to reach home.

As the attack was local and appeared to be developing only on a small scale and as our defenses were fully ready it was not considered appropriate in this particular instance to issue an air-raid warning which would have caused dislocation and inconvenience over a wide area.

The responsibility for issuing air raid warnings must be left to the competent authorities, but the circumstances in which warnings should be issued will be carefully reviewed in the light of the experience gained.

At 10:30 a. m. today an air raid took place on Scapa Flow. The attack was made by about four machines. Two bombs fell very near H. M. S. Iron Duke and the ship sustained certain damages. No casualties occurred.

H. M. S. Iron Duke is an old battleship which it will be recollected was demilitarized under a London naval treaty of 1930 and had all her armour removed. She has since been used for depot and training purposes.

One aircraft was shot down in flames by the fire of either ship or shore guns and another probably damaged.

Athenia Bore Cargo of Guns, Passenger Says

HadArtillery forCanada, Was to Become Raider, Congressman Told

By the Associated Press

An affidavit saying that the liner Athenia, sunk September 3 en route to New York, carried coast defense guns for Canada and was to be outfitted as a raider after completing its trip, has been filed at the State Department by Gustav A. Anderson, of Evanston, Ill., a travel bureau operator. He was a passenger.

The affidavit was drawn on the basis of questions by three Representatives: Case (Republican), South Dakota; Brooks (Democrat), Louisiana, and Pierce (Democrat), Oregon. Anderson grew up in Pierce's Congressional district.

The affidavit said:

"Congressman Case: Have you any knowledge whether the Athenia carried guns or ammunition on that trip?

"Anderson: There were no guns in sight outside.

"Congressman Brooks: Were there any guns inside that you know of?"

"Anderson: I believe there was. I talked to the chief officer, and I asked him, 'Are there guns here?' He said they were in the hold and there were plenty on board.

"Congressman Pierce: What did he say they were for?

"Anderson: He said they were to be used for coast defense for Halifax and Quebec.

Pierce: Did he say she was fitted out as a raider?

Anderson: He said they were to outfit the Athenia as a raider for her return trip.

Brooks: Did you see any guns?

Anderson: I was looking down the hold and talking with one of the seamen loading cargo. I asked, "What's that, the guns?" And he said, "Yes."

Brooks:: What did you have reference to?

Anderson: The stuff down in the hold. There was a canvas or burlap covering it. . . .

"Brooks: Did you see any indications that the Athenia was equipped to carry guns?

Anderson: She was reinforced with heavy beams and braces."

Anderson's affidavit is one of several scores already obtained by the State Department from passengers aboard the Athenia. The department is seeking to ascertain responsibility for the sinking in which 28 Americans lost their lives.

Secretary of State Hull said yesterday that word of Anderson's affidavit was the first intimation he had of guns being aboard the vessel.

(Stephen Early, secretary of President Roosevelt, said at the time of the sinking that the Athenia apparently was not carrying munitions.

("I'd like to point out," he said, "that according to official information the ship had come from Glasgow to Liverpool and was bound for Canada bringing refugees. I point this out to show that there was no possibility, according to the official information, that the ship was carrying any munitions, or anything of that kind.") waited to receive it.

After penetrating the mine barrage, Prien said, "I saw ahead of me two large battleships lying to the north."

"Without delay," he continued, "we loosed one torpedo, which was followed by a tremendous water spout as it apparently hit the first ship—the Royal Oak.

"A few minutes later we loosed another and then another and another. Then we saw one water spout after another, followed by a series of huge explosions—with white, red and green lights in a fireworks display such as I have never before seen.

"Pieces of deckwork, masts and smokestacks flew up into the air, giving the impression that the entire ship was completely blown to smithereens.

"After the smoke of the explosions cleared away I sighted the second ship lying slightly southward of the other. There is no doubt in my mind that this must have been the Repulse. We loosed another torpedo and saw another huge waterspout.

"My next thought was to get away. We did not want to be captured and spend the rest of the war in a British prison camp. So we went out again past the submarine barrage. As we escaped into the open sea we could hear dull thuds, sounding like depth charges, and at the same time saw serachlights played on the water.

"Apparently the British thought we were still inside the harbor."

The incredible luck which must have attended this feat seems even more astonishing in view of Prien's statement that he not only fired off his shots, but he even kept his periscope above water and watched the torpedos hit before "carefully sneaking through the barrier again."

"The tremendous hurrahs which greeted my announcement, 'One battleship sunk, another badly damaged,' wree my greatest reward."

Russia Consulted On Baltic Exodus

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Oct. 17.—Russia opened negotiations with Germany on repatriation of German minorities in the Baltic states and former Polish territory today after halting, for the present at least, inconclusive diplomatic talks with Turkey.

A German delegation headed by a foreign office official flew from Berlin to begin the consultations of Adolf Hitler's plans to return all Germans living abroad. Hitler announced his repatriation program October 6 and negotiations with Baltic states are under way.

Germany now has two missions in Moscow. A second delegation has been here several days conferring with Soviet trade experts on problems in connection with the German-Russian trade and credit agreement announced August 20.

Meanwhile reports here told of an increasing flood of Jewish refugees from German-occupied Poland pouring into adjoining Polish territory now held by the Russians.

The reports said scattered remnants of the Polish army still were fighting a guerrilla campaign in eastern Poland, hiding in woods and marshes and wearing uniforms of Soviet soldiers they had killed.

1,000,000 Refugees

There were unofficial reports of the stream of Jewish refugees from the German side of the new boundary, estimated already to total 500,000 to 1,000,000.

For example, the population of Bialystok (Belostok), on the Russian side of the line, normally 100,000, is said to be nearly doubled. Wilno (Vilna), which Russia gave back to Lithuania, also was said to be jammed with refugee Jews.

Russians here say the Red Army is receiving the Jews cordially and providing work for them. The native population, however, is said to be fearful of Nazi spies among the refugees and to be receiving them with suspicion.

The future status of the wanderers remained unsettled.

In absence of developments on the diplomatic front with regard to the Finnish and Turkish negotiations, Russia was conducting a propaganda campaign for approval at a plebiscite Sunday of her annexation of the Polish Ukraine and White Russian territory.

$3,000,000 of Gold Made Available To Brazil by U. S.

Under a special reciprocal arrangement with Brazilian financial authorities, the Treasury has made available $3,000,000 of gold to the Brazilian treasury, it was learned yesterday. The gold has been earmarked for the account of Brazil at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

An agreement entered into between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Brazilian minister on July 16, 1937, provided that the United States undertake to sell gold to Brazil at such times and in such amounts as the Brazilian government may request, up to a total of $60,000,000. However, the Brazilian treasury did not avail itself of the agreement until recently.

The agreement is designed "to promote the development of conditions favorable to the maintenance of monetary equilibrium."

circles evidently not interested in European peace."

Mr. Roosevelt's note was sent on the eve of the opening of the Moscow-inspired negotiations with Finland, when Scandinavian and other neutral lands were alarmed lest Russia's continued expansion of her influence in the Baltic result in an extension of war to that area. Following the granting of sea and air base sites to the Soviet by Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, the Finns, next to be invited to Moscow for a conference, let it be known that if the Soviet demands were too stringent Finland would fight.

In this atmosphere, diplomatic representatives here of the Scandinavian lands called on President Roosevelt and State Department officials. On the same day that Mr. Roosevelt's note was presented by American Ambassador Laurence A. Steinhardt, representations also were made to the Moscow government by Sweden, Norway and Denmark.

President Roosevelt wrote:

The President of the United States sends his greetings to President Kalinin with the following personal message:

While the United States is taking no part in existing controversies in Europe, the President wishes to call attention to the long standing and deep friendship which exists between the United States and Finland. He feels that he can call this to the attention of President Kalinin because of their joint efforts a number of years ago which resulted in the resumption of friendly relations between the Soviet Union and the United States.

Such being the case, the President expresses the earnest hope that the Soviet Union will make no demands on Finland which are inconsistent with the maintenance and development of amicable and peaceful relations between the two countries, and the independence of each.

The President feels sure that President Kalinin and the government of the Soviet Union will understand the friendly spirit in which this message is sent, and extends to President Kalinin an expression of his highest consideration.

"(Signed)

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Pesident Kalinin replied on October 16:

Mr. President: I thank you for your greetings and for the friendly sentiments expressed in your message transmitted to me on October 12.

I consider it appropriate to remind you, Mr. President, that the state independence of the Finnish Republic was recognized by the free will of the Soviet government on December 31, 1917, and that the sovereignty of Finland was guaranteed to it by the peace treaty of October 14, 1920, between the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic and Finland. By the above-mentioned acts of the Soviet government the basic principles of the reciprocal relations between the Soviet Union and Finland were defined, the present negotiations between the Soviet government and the government of Finland are also being conducted in conformity with these principles.

Despite the tendentious versions which are being disseminated by circles evidently not interested in European peace, the sole aim of the negotiations referred to above is the consolidation of the reciprocal relations between the Soviet Union and Finland and a strengthening of friendly co-operation between both countries in the cause of guaranteeing the security of the Soviet Union and Finland. I beg you, Mr. President, to accept the expression of my deep respect.

M. Kalinin.

British Claim 4 Planes Shot Down in Raid

Training Ship Hit By Bombs in Attack On Scapa Flow Base

By Edwin Stout,
Associated Press Staff Writer.

London, Oct. 17.—German warplanes struck twice today at the Scapa Flow lair of Britain's fleet, hitting and damaging the training ship Iron Duke, and ranged over the east coast of England and Scotland in widespread scouting raids.

Four German planes were reported shot down, bringing their losses to eight in two days.

The attacks followed yesterday's raid on the Edinburgh and Firth of Forth area in which three British naval vessels were slightly damaged, 16 sailors and officers killed and 45 injured.

Ship Sunk in Harbor

They came as the government disclosed that the heavily defended Scapa Flow harbor was the scene of the U-boat sinking Saturday of the battleship Royal Oak, with 786 men lost.

In the first attack today, at 10:30 a. m., four German planes damaged the Iron Duke, Admiral Jellicoe's flagship in the World War.

One of the four planes was said by the British to have been shot down in this first attack, and another damaged.

The second attack was from 12:30 to 2:30 p. m. and was by "two formations of six and four aircraft," the admiralty said.

British Deny Damage

No damage was done and one German plane destroyed, the admiralty reported.

[An eye-witness to the bombings said there were three distinct attacks, the United Press said. The variation was explained perhaps by the fact that the second attack was carried out by two formations.—Editor's note.]

An official announcement accounted for the other two German planes reported shot down by saying that "subsequent to reports of enemy activity on the east coast today two enemy aircraft were later observed on the northeast coast and were attacked by Royal Air Force fighters. Both were shot down and fell into the sea."

(DNB, German official news agency, admitted the loss of but one Nazi plane, and said Germans had shot down a British pursuit plane in the raid.)

The admiralty said there were no casualties in either raid.

German aviation also was active against merchant shipping.

The admiralty said that during the morning the steamer St. Ola was attacked near the Scapa Flow area of the Orkney Islands and bombs dropped about her, but that none took effect.

Trawler Escapes Bombs

German airplanes also were reported to have dropped bombs near a Belgian trawler between the mainland of Scotland and the Orkneys. The trawler was not hit, reports from the area said.

Air-raid alarms sounded over a broad coastal area shortly after the Scapa Flow attack. A communique said one German plane was chased out to sea off the Yorkshire coast, but added that no bombs were dropped in any of the districts over which the German scouting flights were made.

Warnings were sounded as far north as the Firth of Forth area around Edinburgh and as close to London as the Chatham naval base, only 20 miles down the Thames. Cities and towns where alarms were given included Grimsby, Southend, Felixstowe, Bridlington, Ipswich, Cleethorpes, Driffield and Chelmsford.

Police to Reveal Names Involved In Ticket-Fixing

The Commissioners yesterday ordered the publication of names involved in future traffic-ticket fixing.

At the same time, Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal, who started the "clean-up," said his assistants at Police Court reported yesterday they had fixed no tickets in the last month.

In the first nine months of the year, Seal said his assistants and members of the Police Department together had adjusted about 3,000 tickets.

Last month Seal told his assistant to put a stop to the "racket."

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, was directed to list the names of the person who receives the ticket, the policeman involved, and the person who fixes it, and the reason.

News of Capital Night Clubs

By Mary Harris.

WHAT A GIRL! Arlyne Chanler, singing at the Club Lafayette with the band of Rudolf Friml, jr., is one of the most newsworthy lasses to arrive in our town this year. . . . She's a protege of Gus Edwards, appeared in his "School Days" and "Night of Stars" . . . She was named "Miss Television' in the NBC contest designed to bring out new talent with both photogenic and vocal qualifications . . . She's that rarity, a native New York girl . . . She was the "Inquiring Reporter" for her high school paper . . . Her best girl friend is Alice Jane McHenry, who evoked so much attention a couple of years ago as "the girl with the upside-down stomach" and is now a successful Manhattan model . . . Her gowns are absoltely stunning, perhaps because her mother, Mrs. Augusta Chanler, is a designer for a noted Fifth avenue shop . . . She's the niece of Senator "Happy" Chandler . . . She sings a mighty cute song . . . And pretty! Just look at the picture above.

ARLYNE CHANLER
Manhattan lovely, singing at the Club Lafayette

BUBLITCHKI, my friends, are Russian doughnuts. That may help you to understand the rollicking coquetry of Dena Larenza, the "Bublitchki Girl," who has just joined Troika's floor revue. Mrs. Helen Hamilton says Dena is the only girl she's ever seen who sings "Bublitchki" with the true carefree spirit of old Russia . . . They say that folks are standing in line for Prince Vada's uncanny fortune reading.

GOWN OF THE EVENING. On Thursday and Friday eves, beginning tomorrow, the "Gown of the Evening" interlude will be part of the floor revue in the Shoreham Blue Room. This will be an especially rare, smart and lovely creation selected by style experts. Women will sigh delightedly over it, but men will clutch their wallets in a panic . . . "Pretty Peggy" Le Baron (see picture above) is displaying both a lovely mezzo-soprano voice and a vivid personality in such contrasted numbers as "Si Si" and the "Indian Love Call." Bobby Herman tap dances on somebody's top hat. (We hope it isn't his own.) Its last week in the Blue Room for the practically incomparable Woods and Bray.

SATURDAY MIDNIGHTS at the Club Caprice are going to be marked by a trick version of the "Drinking Song" from the "Vagabond King" by Evalyn Tyner and her Swing Sophisticates. A clever way to remind the customers that the fateful hour of bar closing has arrived. P. S. The Caprice is busy as a bee hive every eve. And that slick trumpeter, Jack Torry, has just joined the Sophisticates.

GOOD TIMING CAMERA. Sharzad. James Melton, movie and concert star, being partied by Carlton's Manager Frank Swadley. . . . Attorney General Frank Murphy entertaining the Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry Woodring before the theater. . . . Lyle O'Rourke, all alone, and seeming to gaze rather specifically at pretty Singer Kay Hoyt, of the Bill McCunesters.

Mayflower Lounge. Mrs. William Borah, charming in a suit of stone-pink wool, with Mrs. Louis Caldwell and Newswomen Helen Essary and Genevieve Herrick. . . . Assistant Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison greeting friends with genial high signs. . . . Mrs. Emil Hurja very soignee in an all-black costume. . . . M. J. Vereen, who was the cotton advisor of NRA.

Lounge Riviera. Mrs. Harry Wardman, looking younger than ever and all done up in silver fox. . . . Decorator Jimmy Stiles with Mrs. Styles and Myra Wilkins, apparently enjoying the Macias tunes no end.

Madrillon. Attorney Fred Rice and Mrs. Rice doing a very expert waltz. . . . Businessman Lee Kemp entertaining a big party. . . . Howard Gottlieb (who's a Madrillon regular if there ever was one) greeting a flock of friends.

Lotus. That big party-of-the-year in honor of Mrs. Leah Steiner, who had just become 75 years young. Buddy Shaner sang "To You" in compliment to Mrs. Steiner and everyone in the place applauded the loveable little lady. She is the great-aunt of Frankie Garner, submaestro of Bill Strickland's Dixieland Swingers.

Bamboo Gardens. The Congressional party in honor of Miss Jeanne Erickson, the "Miss World's Fair" of Nebraska. It included her mother, Mrs. O. L. Erickson, Representative Carl T. Curtis, of Nebraska; Representative Frank O. Horton, of Wyoming; Representative Lewis D. Thill, of Wisconsin, and Representative John C. Kunkel, of Pennsylvania.

HEARTY CONGRATULATIONS to Owner Dick Ashby, of Dick's Grill, and attractive Mrs. Ashby. They've just become the parents of a lovely baby daughter, whom they've promptly named Anna Therese.

POPULAR PASTIME in the Metronome Room is trying to pick a proper name for the jolly old king on the mural in back of the King's Jesters. Everyone is invited to join in the fun. But don't you dare suggest "Ivan the Terrible," or you may be aired. How about "Le Grand Monarque?" . . . You might also try to christen Pianist Bobby Acri's new composition in high rhythm So far it's just being called "Opus No. 1."

RUUDY VALLEE, in saying good-by to his radio audience, gave a big hand to Capt. Don Dickerman, of the Pirates' Den, as not only one of his best and oldest friends but the instigator of his success on the air waves.

HI HAT IMPORT. Al Tory, direct from Boston, is the new pianist with Jack Manning's "Strings of Romance." Al used to be with Glen Gray's Casa Lomas. Which gives you an idea of how good he is. He also plays the trombone and will be swingin' out on it pretty soon.

MATT WINDSOR is rounding out his first year in the Anchor Room. For the good reason that he is one of the best pianists and accordionists you'll ever hear; can play anything from Greig to Berlin on a moment's notice. Another reason for Anchor popularity is the cordiality of petite Hostess Rosetta Hamilton, the one gal in town who's gone to the World's Fair three times this summer.

START EARLY if you're planning to go to the Rainbow Room this week-end. They've been putting up the rope so regularly at 10:15 on Saturdays that it's getting to be an unbreakable custom. The management kindly puts in all the extra tables possible—but, after all, you can't put tables right in the middle of a dance floor.

PENNY FORD'S first request number at Mayfair was for "Well, All Right," the song in which she scored so strongly at Metronome last summer. But if you want Penny to sing that one, folk, you hould bring your own bass and baritone chorus to shout "Well, All Right!"

A TUNE COLLECTOR is George Bersch, of the Neptune Room's Three Couriers. To date George has collected 3,347 tunes—can sing any one of them in a flash. He plans to call it a day when he has gotten together 6,000 songs, which, he figures, will make him "stump proof."

DANCING DIDOES are more fun in the Pall Mall Room. The Arthur Murray Dancers, led by Miss Ethel Fisters, put on an informal dance lesson and try-out session. They'll teach you to do the samba, the conga or a jig-step. If you pick it up fast, well, all right! If you don't, it's even more fun—especially for onlookers.

SPEAKEASY. Sh-h-! We thought that "speaks" were things of the past. But we hear there's one up on Connecticut avenue, and that it's doing a vurra swanky after-hours busines. Just like the old times.

Duke of Gloucester Swaps Jokes Somewhere in France

By Edward Angly.

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

With the British Army, Somewhere in France, Oct. 17.—A little group of half a dozen of us was standing at a crossroads in a tiny hamlet this afternoon watching the passing by at formidable speed of a regiment of "cavalry tanks" whose maneuvers we were later to follow, as they pretended that the Germans, still far away, were actually coming over a nearby ridge.

While we stood there, a car driven by an officer whose staff rank was indicated by his scarlet cap band, drew up. The officer at the wheel turned out to be Maj. Gen. the Duke of Gloucester, younger brother of King George VI. Beside him sat, as equerry, a British maor.

Duke Swaps Limericks

In the back seat sat the car's regular chauffeur, an enlisted man. The Duke of Gloucester, as it developed, was a personal friend of the army captain who was conducting our little party of professional sightseers. They chatted a while and swapped limericks.

A simple American pedestrian, gadding about in British motors and British uniform, trying to see and learn as much as possible before being obliged to buckle down to reporting real war news, can never tell whom he may encounter.

Only last Saturday while on a visit to what is the present front line for the British, just a few yards from the French frontier, the brigadier (they used to be called brigadier generals) offered me a glass of port, told me a lot of things that cannot yet be reported, asked me the usual question as to what America was likely to do in this show, then turned me over to "Capt. Cambridge," who was in command of the company holding an advance block house and its flanking and very muddy terrain.

Germany by Periscope

Since I was the only military ignoramus in the group, the only one who hadn't previously had a look into the secrets of the Maginot Line, "Capt. Cambridge" volunteered to show me the guns. He lowered a periscope to my level for a good peep off into another country and answered all questions, foolish or otherwise.

At the French home where the officers of this guards regiment have their mess, I was struck with the youthfulness of the colonel, the almost boyishness of some of his lieutenants. The chaplain of the regiment was there, so young his beard seemed scarcely yet incipient.

It was only afterwards that I learned the full identity of the Captain Cambridge who had been left out in the rain and mud to carry on his tour of duty in and between pillboxes and blockhouses, while we lunched in a snug room.

He is to society reporters and to "Burke's Peerage" Lord Frederick Cambridge, first cousin of King George VI and nephew of Queen Mary.

A very decent young English chap, I'll call him, courteous and helpful and doing his job out in the mud with the air of one who knows he is about. He and the Duke of Gloucester, who is the chief liason officer of the British Army in France, are the only two members of the royal family on duty at the front. The Duke of Windsor, who relinquished his old title of field marshal to become a major general in this war, is reported to have accepted an assignment in France.

Driving day after day through the zone assigne dto the British army, one is repeatedly struck by two things; first, the almost entire absence of marching men. Their squads, their platoons, their companies, their regiments, are motorized.

Parley Today Seeks Arms Ban Compromise

Called by Pittman; Filibuster 'Going on Now,' Conally Hints

Proposals to be laid before Foreign Relations Committee Democrats today will range from the Bailey amendment to "blackout" American shipping within 500 miles of the European war center, but permit shipping elsewhere, to the White amendment throwing all shipping lanes open but giving the President discretionary power to restrict trade routes through combat zone regulations.

Bars Sea Travel to Canada

A third amendment by Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, opens the entire Pacific area to American shipping, which is contemplated as well by the other two. Senator Connally will carry to the conference still another draft, opening up the Pacific area, and permitting full American ship operations in the South Atlantic, below the thirtieth parallel, but barring ocean travel to Canada, Nova Scotia or Bermuda.

Following close study of the several amendments by Pittman and the State Department, the group of Democrats favorable to the bill will attempt to agree on a single draft, and are already informally agreed on the principle of extending American trade rights where this can be done without war-provoking risks.

One student of shipping estimated that the amendment by Chairman Bailey, of the Senate Commerce Committee, would permit operation of all but 75 of the 130 American vessels that would otherwise be tied up by the bill's drastic provisions. Of these, it was said that 25 could resume travel in the Pacific and the Atlantic, and 30 would find a field in South American trade zones, as belligerents curtailed their merchant marine service.

Trade Elsewhere to Continue

Roughly, the Bailey amendments, it is said, would stop all American ship trade adjacent to Europe in the area above 30 degrees, north latitude, and east of 50 degrees, west longitude, affecting neutrals in that area as well as belligerents. Trade elsewhere, in the Pacific, and in the Atlantic, including routes to South Africa, could be continued by American ships.

Bailey continued to guard precise provisions of his plan, referring all questioners to his speech in the Senate last week that restrictions be eased.

Consideration was being given in other Senate quarters to legislation next session to compensate American ship owners whose vessels are laid up for keeping this segment of the Merchant Marine in fit operating condition. One such proposal was for a moratorium on debts owed the Government by the non-operating lines during the period they are tied up.

Maloney Declares for Repeal

Solution of the shipping compromise, following Monday's move by Pittman to eliminate from the bill discretionary authority for 90-day credits to belligerents, is counted on by leaders to shorten debate on the bill by removing all main sources of conflict but the central embargo repealer.

Through 5½ hours of debate, the Senate yesterday heard Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, warn that the repeal of embargo might bring submarine and warship action off the American coast and bring the European war "right to our front door."

It heard Senator Maloney (Democrat), of Connecitcut, hitherto uncommitted, declare himself on the Administration side in the fight for repeal, and assert that 40 Senators in favor of repeal, including himself, either were personally subject to military call, or had sons, nephews or sons-in-law who were. He said he cited results of a personal survey to show "that the majority of the Senators of the United States Senate to not feel that the passage of this bill will be the first step toward war."

Opposing repeal, Senator Danaher, Maloney's Republican Connecticut colleague, told the Senate that passage of the bill would have the effect of sending a message to belligerents having ships to carry goods from America: "We will help you by repealing the embargo on arms to poison those soldiers who march under the egis of a philosophy that we do not like, and if poisoning is not enough, we will help you to throw flames on them. We will act for you for cash in the name of humanity."

Senator Walsh, chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, charged that by repealing the arms embargo Congress will "perform an overt act" against Germany, and give practical aid and assistance to Great Britain and France.

"Candor compels me to state," said the Massachusetts Democrat, "that I think of nothing, now that war has swept over Europe, that threatens more certainly to involve us in the present holocaust than to deliberately reverse our present policy of positive refusal to sell war weapons to any or all belligerents, and by solemn enactment offer the output of our munitions factories for sale, knowing that only one group of belligerents can be our customer."

Walsh said embargo repeal has become a "symbol" and the fact of its repeal will "officially proclaim to the world our intention of becoming an ally of Britain and France and of making the United States their economic base of supplies." He charged this "will set in motion a chain of circumstances that in all reasonable probability will result in war."

"We are asked," Walsh said, "to repeal the embargo in the name of neutrality and under false disguise for peace, when in fact it is the very opposite."

Walsh Warns of Retaliation

Walsh said he did not question that the motives of President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull, and said that they were acting for "what they conceive to be the best interests of the Nation," but charged that some "others" are for repeal because they are against neutrality and "for war."

Warning that retaliation may follow from Germany if the embargo is repealed, Walsh told the Senate:

"The repeal of the arms embargo law will be tragic. It would enormously increase our present serious peril. It is tragic enough to become involved in war by having a public opinion favoring peace, changed to one of war, through the ordinary mute incidents of war, our hatreds, our fears or our sympathies, but it is criminal to plunge a free people into war by incidents and situations which result from efforts made to sell implements of war."

In disclosing he will vote for embargo repeal, Senator Maloney said the bill "will in no way increase the danger to us" and there are features "which add to our protection against war."

Omitted in Delivery

In his prepared speech, but omitted in Senate delivery, Maloney said that in striving to reach a conclusion he, like other members, had suffered harsh criticism and "political and physical threats" but would perform his duty without considering "the possible personal after effects." Maloney told reporters he stood by the statement, but omitted the reference in delivery so as not to forcus undue attention upon them.

In hi prepared speech, he also declared:

"I know that the people who feel so intensely on this bill may one day put into effect the threats they have made, but to act otherwise than in accordance with one's judgment and conscience would be as a man washing his hands in the face of the possible threat of Christianity's crucifixion."

Maloney told the Senate it should not hesitate to take what it considers the right course "because we fear to create hard feelings."

"We cannot worry," said the Connecticut Democrat, "about what some people in a distant land think of our action here. We have the solemn obligation of doing what appears to be the right thing, though it may seem to tread upon the feelings of some of those across the seas."

Maloney said America's first duty is to "mind our own business' and declared that means "affording a protection to our people—a protection against war — a protection against the staining of our national honor—a protection against loss of the high moral code that has endured for a century and a half—and a protection against the abandonment of Christian ideals."

He said he would "yea" on the bill because he believes it "a bill to maintain America's integrity and to keep us at peace."

"I want to prove to the rest of the world that we are not lacking in moral values, and that while we have a strong naval and military defense, we will likewise keep our spiritual armament strong and untarnished."

President Seeks Haven for War Refugees

they would have to consult their governments with regard to President Roosevelt's proposal for a war refugee resettlement program.

Mr. Roosevelt said his suggestions embraced a short-range and a long-range program. The war refugee plan represented the long-range phase. The short-range phase was continuation of the task of finding permanent domiciles in out-of-the-way and more-or-less vacant spaces of the earth for political refugees from Germany.

The latter work, he emphasized, should be carried on during the war, and the plans for resettling war refugees should be made while war is on so that progress will have been made in that direction when it is over.

The problem of finding homes for political refugees from Germany, he declared, is of "comparatively small magnitude," compared to the job of resettling the millions who may be torn from their homelands, and rendered outcasts and wanderers, by "this ghastly war."

Advance Work Necessary

One point the President sought to drive home was that relocation of people in the undeveloped spaces of the earth would have to be preceded by thorough economic and engineering surveys which would require at least two or three years to complete. He said it was "neither wise nor fair" to send colonists into such places without the advantage of thorough advance and survey work.

His remarks on this point raised the question whether he was referring to investigations made on behalf of the committee into four proects—the Philippine and Dominican Republic projects already named, one in northern Rhodesia and one in British Guiana.

He said, at his press conference, that the surveys should determine health condtions, and such questions as how long it would be before colonists would be self-sustaining, how much it would cost to get them located, and how long it would take before there would be a return on capital invested in the colony.

The President, at the same time, made clear that American Government contributions toward the work of finding homes for the refugees now in countries adjacent to Germany was not to be expected. He remarked, in reply to a question, that this work could be carried out by private contributions.

Largely German Jews

These refugees are largely German Jews, some of them children put on trains by parents so desperate a sto trust their offspring to the outside world and fate. Mr. Roosevelt said the task of caring for these people should be kept distinct and separate from the war defugee problem.

The likelihood of an extreme war refugee problem, he declared, is the reason why homes should be obtained for these refugees and preparations made for the bigger job ahead. Great Britain and grance cannot be exjected to do more at present than to "give a continuation of their sympathy and interest." Neutral nations, therefore, owe it to humanity to carry on the work.

Possibility that there may be between 10,000,000 and 20,000,000 war refugees, the President declared, is an estimate based on the "reasonable doctrine of chances." These people may be living in many countries, he said, "and possibly on several continents."

There are a number of "vacant spaces" on the globe, he declared, where the anticipated war refugees could be relocated. He mentioned, in particular, "the African, American and Australasian portions of the globe." These areas, he said, cover millions of square miles in comparatively young republics and in colonial possessions or dominions of older nations.

No One Race Group Involved

He emphasized that the problem "involves no one race group—no one religious faith," but it the problem of all groups and faiths. Moreover, he said, "it is not enough to indulge in horrified humanitarianism, empty resolutions, golden rhetoric and pious words."

"Remembering the words written on the Statue of Liberty," he declared, "let us lift a lamp beside new golden doors and build new refuges for the tired, for the poor, for the huddled masses yearning to be free."

Penalizing Voters

It is a curious misdemeanor of which Mayor Maury Maverick of San Antonio is accused by a Texas grand jury. He is alleged to have conspired with his secretary and two other persons to make it possible for five workers to vote in a municipal election. Most States take pride in sending a large percentage of their population to the polls. In a large part of the South, however, the privilege of voting is still associated with the state of a citizen's purse.

So long as poll taxes are collected as the price of casting a vote, it is doubtless reasonable to forbid the payment of such taxes by anyone other than the voter himself. If politicians were allowed to pay the poll tax of citizens without funds, as Mayor Maverick is accused of doing, it might readily prove an easy way of buying votes. Yet this prohibition serves to emphasize the anachronism of the poll tax in a modern democracy.

The poll tax, of course, is a vestigial remnant of the requirement that a citizen had to be also a property owner in order to vote. Most of the States have long since abandoned the idea that poverty should necessarily disqualify a citizen in the exercise of civic rights. Indeed, the poll tax is seldom defended today on the ground that it is compatible with democracy.

Other arguments advanced to support it are scarcely less lacking in validity. If regarded as a tax to support education or any other State function, it gains no strength, because of its uneven incidence. Progressive States interested in revenue would probably replace this obsolete levy with a graduated income tax.

Actually, the only reason for the poll tax is that it prevents indigent citizens from expressing their preferences at the polls. And taxes levied for that purpose have no place in the American democratic system. Instead of prosecuting Mr. Maverick for allegedly helping the poor to vote, Texas would do better to carry out the pledge of Gov. O'Daniel to repeal its outdated poll-tax law.

Tips And Wages

Since the Federal wages-and-hours act sets a rigid minimum hourly wage rate for workers covered by this law, the adjustments made necessary by the tipping system are of doubtful legality in addition to being administratively difficult.

The "red caps" at the railway stations, who in most cases derive their income entirely from tips, present a particularly knotty problem for the consideration of Administrator Andrews. He complains that the roads have, with few exceptions, tried to avoid complying with minimum-wage-rate requirements by compelling the "red caps" to account for tips and then deducting the tips from their guaranteed minimum wages. Mr. Andrews is preparing to test the legality of these arrangements at an early date. Meantime, he has ordered that a more detailed record of "red cap" earnings and hours shall be kept.

It is obvious that workers whose earnings are derived largely from tips would be especially favored under minimum-wage legislation which took no account of this supplementary source of income. Unless or until the tipping system is abolished, it seems only fair as well as logical that tips should be included in determining whether an employe is receiving a decent minimum wage. Such allowances have been made for waitresses under the District minimum-wage law, which leaves the question of what is a proper minimum to administrative determination. If the courts should rule that the more rigid Federal wages-and-hours act does not permit similar allowances for tips, amendments to the law will be imperative.

Apart from legal complications, there are of course serious administrative difficulties in trying to make adjustments for tips. Workers may be tempted to withhold information, and, under the present system of payment, there is no way of accurately checking their statements. On the other hand, there is danger that employers will make deductions for nonexistent tips and that workers will acquiesce for fear of losing their jobs.

In the case of the "red caps" a solution of the tipping problem might possibly be found in a system of definite charges for the carrying of baggage similar to that employed at baggage-checking stations. The amount of payments received and the amount of work performed could then be readily ascertained and the roads' necessary contribution, if any, to the statutory minimum wage could be determined with a high degree of accuracy.

Trade With Argentina

The proposed agreement with Argentina seems destined to put Secretary Hull's reciprocal trade program to its most severe test. Farmers and their representatives in Congress fear that concessions on competitive Argentine products may add to existing agricultural surpluses in this country. Some legislators have gone so far as to threaten a fight to repeal the trade-agreement act if a larger volume of competitive farm products is admitted to the American market in return for Argentine concessions on our industrial exports.

These fears are based largely upon the list of products on which the United States is considering concessions. Included in this list are casein, linseed oil, canned meat, cheese, corn, cattle hides and various other agricultural products. Fresh meats would be excluded, however, under the sanitary embargo which still remains in effect.

On the other hand, the negotiations with Argentina are considered by many as an opportunity for the United States to take over part of that country's trade heretofore going to European countries now at war. An agreement with the most progressive nation of South America, it is argued, would strengthen commercial ties with our southern neighbors to the mutual advantage of all countries in the Western Hemisphere.

This desire to extend American trade is, of course, wholly constructive. But it is not simply a problem of inducing Argentina to buy more American machinery, automobiles and typewriters. The war has made it even more essential that we take a larger volume of South American products if we are to expand our markets in that region. And we must face the fact that most of what Argentina wishes to sell is competitive with the products of our own farms.

Obviously, this proposed agreement should be negotiated with full recognition of its direct bearing upon our domestic agricultural policy. As Senator Connally pointed out to the committee for reciprocity information, Congress appropriated $700,000,000 to aid farmers this year. Much of this money is used to compensate tillers of the soil for reducing the size of their crops. Federal funds have also been used to purchase surplus commodities and to pay export subsidies on wheat and cotton.

It would be a direct contradiction of policy for the Administration to grant concessions on competitive agricultural imports while it is paying domestic farmers for not producing similar crops. So the Department of State faces the necessity of reconciling whatever concessions may be granted with the general farm policy of the Department of Agriculture. The whole theory behind the AAA is that it will tend to bring agriculture into a more balanced relationship to industry. Unless that policy is to be abandoned, it would seem to preclude any extensive concessions at the expense of agriculture for the benefit of expanding industrial exports.

A consistent policy does not mean, of course, that no trade agreement with the Argentine can be negotiated. There are a number of products on which concessions can be granted without piling up new agricultural surpluses. The careful defense of domestic interests in all the trade agreements negotiated to date strongly suggests that the pact with Argentina will be similarly safeguarded. For that very reason, however, only moderate increases in our trade with the other American republics can be reasonably anticipated.

Flexible Slum Clearance

The latest application of the Alley Dwelling Authority for USHA funds illustrates the futility of academic arguments as to whether low-cost housing should be located on slum sites or vacant land. As a general policy, the ADA aims its attack directly at the slums. Yet two of its seven projects now under way are on vacant land. One of the two proposed new developments would also be built outside of slum areas.

It happens that the Government itself has performed a major operation in slum clearance during recent months. The new Social Security, Railroad Retirement and Census buildings are rising on sites formerly occupied by old dwellings which housed from 600 to 800 low-income Negro families. Some other blighted squares are soon to be taken over for Federal buildings. So the ADA is confronted by a "very serious shortage of dwellings for Negroes."

In these circumstances it is unwise to raze more slums until the shortage of low-rental housing has been relieved. Certainly it would be no kindness to slum dwellers to drive them out of quarters they now occupy when no other dwellings are available. Such an inconsiderate policy would inevitably lead to more severe overcrowding in the diminished number of unfit houses left intact.

What is needed, of course, is a well-balanced program directed primarily at elimination of slums but also flexible enough to avoid further shortage of housing for low-income families. Some day it may be desirable to put a strict ban on the occupancy of any houses unfit for human habitation. Before that will be practicable, however, the construction of low-rental dwellings to replace slums will have to proceed much further than it has done to date.

Russia Meets Obstacles

For some weeks following the outbreak of the war which Stalin's deal with Hitler helped to precipitate, Russia had it all her own way in Europe.

Without having to strike a single blow, the Bolsheviks fell heir to a large chunk of Poland, following Germany's conquest of that country. Soon after, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania submitted to pressure from Moscow and swung into the Russian orbit. These little republics are now, to all intents and purposes, protectorates of their immensely larger and more powerful neighbor and wholly at the latter's mercy. After 22 years, Russia is back in the Baltic with a vengeance.

Not content with even these considerable gains, Stalin immediately sought further diplomatic conquests. Pressure began to be put on Finland to make concessions so far-reaching as to shake the entire Scandinavian peninsula. At the same time, the Turkish foreign minister was summoned to Moscow to learn Russia's intentions with regard to the partitioning of Rumania and a Nazi-Communist hegemony in the Balkans.

But Finland and Turkey are proving tough nuts for the Kremlin to crack. The Finnish government has announced its desire to be conciliatory toward Moscow, but has refused to accept any terms that would mean curtailment of national independence. And after four weeks of apparently indecisive discussions with the Bolshevik leaders, the Turkish foreign minister yesterday announced his intention of going home without a new agreement

The question now is whether Stalin, having been refused a whole loaf by Finland and Turkey, will accept half a loaf from both or either. Neither Turkey nor Finland is in a position effectively to resist large-scale military pressure from Russia. But there are also many reasons why Stalin will hesitate before plunging his nation into war even with a smaller and weaker neighbor.

It is significant that the refusal of Finland and Turkey to bow the knee to the more extreme of Russia's undisclosed demands has not led the Kremlin to order an invasion of either of those countries. Such enforced moderation on Moscow's part has a hopeful bearing on the fate of Finland and Turkey, as well as of Russia's other neighbors old and new. It also has a bearing on the course of events elsewhere. For if Russia is unwilling to wage war on her own behalf, and against weak neighbors, she will be doubly hesitant about joining Germany in the struggle against the Allies.

Informed Discussion

The National Economic and Social Planning Association is a voluntary organization, the main objective of which is "the design of methods and the formulation of policies for the more effective organization of our society." In other words, the association is interested in molding public opinion on questions of economic and social moment by rational discussion and definite formulation of plans of action as an alternative to a policy of drift.

In accordance with its general purpose, the N. E. S. P. A. has begun a series of studies dealing with the problems created for the United States by the war, to be published in Plan Age—the association's official organ. The first study, dealing with methods of controlling inflation while the United States remains neutral, is the outcome of discussions participated in by Government experts, businessmen and university professors. Subsequent topics will, in similar fashion, be developed through the group method of study and discussion.

To the general reader the summarized results of a discussion ranging over such a broad field as control of inflation is suggestive rather than enlightening. But those who participate in the discussion of a topic of such moment are undoubtedly benefited by the exchange of views and better able to assist both in the formulation of public policies and in judging their efficacy and appropriateness.

"The average modern girl marries a man with money and a sense of humor," asserts a sociologist. If he didn't have money, she wouldn't marry him, and if he didn't have a sense of humor, he wouldn't marry her.

Newspaper humorists are having a tough time of it now. They're sitting up late every night trying to think up something as funny as the stuff that appears in the news columns.

A Vermont man, 86, is riding a bicycle 2,600 miles to South Dakota to visit a friend of his boyhood days. That's going a long and hard way for a disillusionment.

A social leader says people are fonder of their homes than ever before. Perhaps so. There is an adage to the effect that absence makes the heart grow fonder.

American Activities

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In connection with the Dies committee investigating un-American activities, it, of course, has never occurred to anyone to investigate American activities which would be just the opposite of un-American activities. There is no public or semi-public agency of the people which will guanantee impartial appraisal and complete evaluation of new proposals penetrating the fallacies of American democracy in the direction of accuracies which would make American democracy a clearer and purer democracy of the people.

If the Dies committee could drop its committee activities into un-American activities just long enough to investigate one new proposal, man could learn the cause and cure of all crime, revolution, and war. By reversing its approach, and studying perfections, rather than imperfections, new civilizing objectivity could be directly approached, as different from the logic of making laws to catch up with the selfish purposes of criminal and revolutionary elements.

U. S. And Japan

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since notice by the United States Department of State of the intended abrogation of the 1911 trade treaty with Japan that country has directed every effort toward attaining a self-sufficiency which will to a large extent nullify the effects of the final abrogation and will also cushion her against a possible embargo on the shipment of war materials from the United States.

The Japanese had deluded themselves into believing that because the United States had taken no official action to stop the flow of war materials used in her war on China the people of the United States were sympathetic to her actions.

The notice of abrogation, along with the popular applause it received, was a distinct shock to the Japanese people. Since then they have been carrying on a renewed campaign to appease public opinion in this country.

An amusing attempt to foster more friendly relations between the United States and Japan is found in a letter published in The Post of October 15, written in Tokyo and signed by T. Yamada.

Panama Conference

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Delegates from the 21 American republics, convened at Panama City and voted a safety zone around our Western Hemisphere, to be patrolled by the Pan-American fleet.

But it happens that because of the non-enforcement of the Washington Doctrine, the whole of the Western Hemisphere does not belong to the 21 American republics. Great Britain, France and Holland still "own" part of the Western Hemisphere; therefore the Pan-American Fleet cannot impede the British, French and Dutch war vessels from having free access to their colonies in America.

As Germany is now at war with Great Britain and France, she can now invade the Guayanas, Bermuda, Canada, etc., with the same right as France has invaded German lands; and the Pan-American Fleet cannot impede Germany from doing so, for the Panama Pan-American Conference has declared the neutrality of the 21 American republics. And Great Britain protests the safety zone, claiming free communication with the Jamaica naval base.

The blunder of the Panama Conference is evident, and moreover, previous to same, Roosevelt had pledged military aid to Canada; therefore Roosevelt's pledge to Canada is now null and void, inasmuch as the Panama Conference pledged the 21 republics to neutrality. And to make things worse, if Roosevelt does not withdraw his pledge to Canada, then the United States are now at war with Germany.

The blundering Panama Conference should have: First, repudiated the Monroe Doctrine; second, resolved further enforcement of the Washington Doctrine, sealed at Yorktown, and third, notified European nations with colonies in America, to withdraw their flags.

A Socialist On The Pact

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter which appeared in The Post October 8, over the signatures of Owen, Gerber and Goodykuntz, eloquently testifies to the general sense of betrayal among class conscious workers everywhere following the signing of the Soviet-Nazi pact.

It is pertinent to point out in this connection that the only group in America which has suffered no acute attack of disillusionment is the Marxian Socialist Labor Party of America.

The writers of the joint effort in question express their disillusionment with the words, "But today! The Soviet Union and Germany are collaborating." Consequently, they hold as their "sincere belief that the Third International today faces bankruptcy."

However, the disillusioned must learn the correct Marxian lesson from this latest Soviet betrayal of the workers of the world before they issue clarion calls for a new "National Communist Party."

Soviet-Nazi collaboration is the logical fruition of the principle of class collaboration urged upon the workers of the world back in 1935 when the Third International loudly proclaimed that the struggle was not between capitalism and socialism but between bourgeois democracy and fascism. In pursuance of this policy, we had here the American version of a "united front" behind the Roosevelt program for saving capitalism even to the point of pledging to support a war waged by American capitalism.

There can no longer be any doubt but that the American Communist Party, more than any other agency of capitalism or fascism, has helped to kill the working class faith in its own strength. They helped to perpetrate and perpetuate in the minds of the workers the capitalist illusion that the working class without the bourgeois elements is insufficient; whereas, the truth is that the working class is the only self-sufficient element in society.

Whatever power the capitalist class seems to have today, it is nevertheless axiomatic that the working class alone can run the industries. It is the only useful class in society and the only class capable of independent existence.

If the principle of class collaboration constitutes a denial of this Marxian premise, it follows logically that the application of the principle of class collaboration is a betrayal of the working class wherever and however it is applied. It matters little whether the collaboration be with the English, French or the German capitalist class. In each and every case the workers are double-crossed.

English Immigration

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Westbrook Pegler's column today alleging that the English have sent to the United States "fewer immigrants than Andorra since the United States put on long pants" indicates that Mr. Pegler could spend a profitable 15 minutes looking at the returns published by the Bureau of the Census showing the results of the Fifteenth Decennial Census, taken in 1930.

Tell him to look under the classification "Foreign White Stock by Country of Origin," which includes white stock of foreign parentage and native white of foreign or mixed parentage. He will see that the total foreign white stock in the United States in 1930 was 38,727,593, of which 13,366,407 were actually of foreign birth and 25,361,186 were of foreign parentage.

Of the 38-odd million total foreign white stock, 10,778,385 came from Great Britain; England, 2,522,261; Canada, 3,337,345 Scotland, 899,591; Wales, 236,667; North Ireland, 695,999, and Irish Free State, 3,0[illegible],522.

Mr. Pegler could read down the column and compare this total of nearly 11,000,000 from Great Britain—almost one-third of our foreign white stock—with a total of 6,873,103 from Germany; 4,546,877 from Italy; 3,342,198 from Palond; 2,669,838 from Russia; 1,562,703 from Sweden; 1,382,079 from Czecho-Slovakia, and 1,100,096 from Norway.

If Mr. Pegler will take the trouble to look at earlier census reports, he will find that Great Britain has been one of the largest consistent contributors to the past and present population of the United States and that the blood which flows through the veins of the "average American" is the same blood that flows through the veins of the little army of 158,000 representing England on the Western Front and which flows through the veins of the sailors manning the British navy.

Wants Hoods Removed

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Under present conditions the pedestrians in Washington deserve praise for their acceptance of and substantial support of the pedestrian traffic rules. They obey the rules under the handicap that the traffic lights were designed and are operated solely to get vehicles through the intersections and street cars around difficult turns. Pedestrian traffic received no consideration. The duration of the orange signal is notoriously inadequate to enable a pedestrian starting on the green signal to reach the opposite curb before the lights change and authorize vehicles to go.

However, it is believed that conditions can be considerably improved at small expense by removing the hoods over the lights. Presumably these hoods were installed in an attempt to prevent vehicles from beating the lights. In effect, they deprive the pedestrian of needed direction.

A pedestrian on the left side of the street must look to the traffic light on the diagonally opposite corner for direction, but the hoods over the lights cut off his view and his best recourse is to look to the movement of vehicles for direction.

For example, a pedestrian going westward on the south side of New York avenue and wishing to cross Fifteenth street must go by the traffic light on the northwest corner. But his vision of those lights is cut off by the hoods over them. On this corner the traffic lights were designed to facilitate the movement of street cars around the corners, and if the pedestrian attempts to get direction by looking at the lights on the northeast corner and mentally reversing them he still cannot be sure of them.

The Post Impressionist

The Duel

I suppose we did look suspicious that night of the duel.

We set out through Lafayette Park, where the fog made each lamp and tree look like a Christmas card, and agreed on the White House. From the Pennsylvania avenue gates we sighted the white-glowing columns along several tentative angles, then pitched camp on the lawn about 20 degrees west of the Sixteenth street perpendicular. DeMoreland blew the stiffness of cold from his fingers and went to work.

I had some difficulty getting my equipment in order in the dark. Five minutes, though, and I was ready to shoot. Then the White House guard popped out of the night. He watched us quietly for a full minute before he spoke.

"You can't do that," he said.

"Can't do what?" I asked.

"You can't take pictures."

"Everybody takes pictures of the White House."

"Not like you're doing it."

"How am I doing it?"

"I don't know how you're doing it, but you can't do it. Orders is orders. Can't have the camera on a tripod. You can, but you got to get special permission for that."

I glanced quickly at DeMoreland. He was laughing at me.

"Look," I appealed to the guard, "is it O. K. if I take pictures if I hold the camera in my hand?"

"Sure."

"That's fine," I said, "only I can't hold the camera still enough for night shots. It's cold. Hands get shaky. Pictures'll blur. But if I used the tripod——"

"Orders is orders."

I folded the equipment and began making up the story of the shot that got away.

"All right, DeMoreland," I said, "you win."

He closed his sketch book. DeMoreland is an artist, a young fellow of the old school. He doesn't like cameras. It's not art," he said at dinner earlier that evening. "It is art," I had insisted. "I challenge you to a duel!" he had said. "I'll bring the sketch book." "An artistic duel," I had answered, "and I'll bring my camera."

He was to sketch, I to expose, and may the better result forever vindicate the art of its exponent.

But we hadn't figured on the White House police. The guard hadn't mentioned anything about special permission to sketch on the Presidential lawn. But DeMoreland—sportsman that he is—snapped shut his book and refused to finish his work.

"Wouldn't be fair to you," he said.

"Thanks," I said. But I happened to catch a glimpse of his sketch, and I'm inclinde to think the spirit of fair play wasn't his only motive. That drawing of his wasn't so hot.

We departed, wondering about the camera-on-tripod objection.

"Maybe," I said, "maybe they think it's a machine gun in disguise."

"Yeah," said DeMoreland, "and maybe you're a spy."

It didn't settle our pencil vs. lens duel. But it did make me take the pledge to keep away from the Washington type of Washington photo. I mean the picture showing the Capitol dome reflected on a wet pavement, or a lot of people looking at a lot of cherry blossoms with the Monument in the background. There's more to the city than this.

Some day we'll fight this duel again. I'll get my artist friend DeMoreland another night, only this time we'll not try to run the Government blockade, and I'll win decisively.

I'll quiet him with a master stroke. It's a foggy night up Rock Creek way. Up where the apartment houses loom high in shadows and the valley drops into misty depths. Where the streets run like blank verse and Ontario road bumps into Ontario place. There's one corner up there . . . a street lamp, a sign post and the trees and the apartment windows warmly glowing . . . all through the fog.

That's the picture I want. Some day I'll aim my trusty ? 3.5 and get it, and DeMoreland won't grin about the White House affair any longer. At any rate, they think enough about photographers to make rules for them. The White House cop hadn't even noticed my friend the artist that night.

Protest Repeal

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Be it resolved that the members of Col. James S. Pettit Camp, No. 3, United Spanish War Veterans, Department of the District of Columbia, in regular meeting assembled, who have served their country in time of war, emphatically protest the repeal of the arms and munitions embargo act now on the statute books, believing that to do so would open the way to involving the country in war and would present the opportunity awaited by subversive groups.

Fair Enough

Expensive Accounts

YOUR CORRESPONDENT is about to take himself on tour for a spell, and the subject of expense accounts naturally presents itself. The subject warms up old memories of Floyd Gibbons, who always gave an impression that, so far as the auditor was concerned, he knew where the body was buried. Actually he didn't go around giving public readings of his expense accounts as inspiration for his colleagues, but from the time he replaced his wardrobe and baggage which had been lost in the Laconia by shopping exclusively in Bond street, London, he was held in awe by his fellow journalists.

There are some individuals—or there were some, anyway, until a few years ago—who always seemed to have permission to spend at their own discretion, and when Mr. Gibbons that time paid $150 just for a suitcase alone to replace the one which had gone down off the coast of Ireland the rest of the little community of ink-stained wretches in London sort of roped him off in a class by himself.

Some Auditors Indecently Curious

VERY LIKELY he would prove to have been the all-time champion of the world if his old statements could be dusted off, for he once crossed the Sahara at the head of his own caravan with only his conscience for his guide. That was an opportunity the like of which befell no other man. Some of his contemporaries while on the march with cavalry columns in the minor league wars had had very valuable thoroughbred horses shot out from under them in poker games, but Floyd's caravan was motorized.

Some auditors are very broad-minded, and some are indecently curious for details and like to collect little souvenirs of a correspondent's travels which are called receipts and vouchers. One of the large metropolitan papers often sends representatives off to the North Pole or to social events calling for finery not included in the standard, everyday kit of a journalist, and is very liberal in the matter of equipment but requires that these garments be turned in at the property office, with the expense acounts, at the end of the duty. They say the boss wears these Eskimo costumes, plug hats and all, to masquerades.

Binocular Cost Placed Too Low

THERE WAS one individual with the A. E. F. who was humiliated deeply by the disallowance of an item of $10 for a pair of binoculars. The auditor did not blink at $25 as this correspondent's share of a banquet for Gen. Bullard or $50 as his share of a banquet for Gen. Pershing, who naturally, required more elegant fare. But he had been passing on expense accounts of correspondents around the world for years, and he insisted that binoculars could not be had for less than $10.

Your correspondent once was placed in a trying situation when he was handed $500 and assigned to go out skylarking in Miami Beach and describe the scenes in the gambling houses. Wine was on sale in these premises at $25 a quart, and the standard price of chips was 50 cents.

It was a pleasant assignment for almost a week, except that as fast as your correspondent would spend money, being a bon vivant, he would win it back playing roulette. It looked as though he might be compelled to resort to stealing in order to avoid the necessity of turning back the $500 intact, which would have made him an outcast from journalism when his luck changed.

But nowadays they don't care $500 worth, or even $5 worth, how much people gamble and drink anywhere.

$2,000 A Month To Live In Moscow

THERE WAS a journalist on assignment in Moscow once who had a serious disagreement over an expense account of $2,000 a month for living expense. He said he was buying his rubles at the legal rate when everybody else was buying them on the Black Bourse for about a dime a dozen, and when they asked him why he didn't buy his on the Black Bourse he said he was too honest to violate the laws of the country. They didn't want a man that honest in Russia, so they called him home, and he quit.

Some ball clubs used to give their players $5 a day on the road for eating money, but they would eat at the Greasy Spoon to knock down money, and when the allowance was reduced to the Greasy Spoon scale they nearly starved. So the club cut out the allowance and gave them permission to sign tabs in the hotel up to $3.50 a day, but without any kick-back for economy.

A long time ago an eminent American statesman got his start in political life by disallowing an item of 50 cents for a baked potato.

This was Senator Donahey, of Ohio, then State auditor and widely unknown. A judge said he had been charged 50 cents for a baked potato in a hotel where he was stopping on official business, and Mr. Donahey appealed to the farmers on the hot potato issue, promising to abolish such wicked extravagance if he were elected Governor.

The farmers believed him, but by one of those strange contradictions of American government the cost of running the State and the career of Mr. Donahey, nevertheless, rose steadily together, both being now near the limit of their possibilities.

On The Record

Lindbergh Foresees New World Order Devised by Nazis

COL. LINDBERGH'S second broadcast is the most sensational address that has yet been made in the debate over the arms embargo, not excepting his own first speech. It demands the most meticulous analysis, at greater length than is possible in one column, for it is, so far as I know, the first attempt at popularization by a very popular American of the "geo-political" and "organic-biological" ideas of Maj. Gen. Haushofer, president of the German Academy, who is the chief theoretician of the new imperialism of the Third Reich.

What Col. Lindbergh was doing was to present in American terms, and applied to us, the picture of the new world order envisaged by the Nazis. It would be plain from the two speeches, and especially from the first one, if it were not already a well-known attitude, repeatedly expressed by the colonel in private conversations, and contemplated with approval, that he expects the Nazis to win this war.

It is also plain from the speech that he foresees a quite new world order as a result of that victory.

His Views Break With U. S. Tradition

WHAT HE SEEMS to be recommending to his fellow citizens is that we anticipate that victory, get the jump on it, as it were, and prepare to be in on the ground floor when the new order emerges.

The fact that his new order represents a radical break with American tradition and American democratic ideas is not emphasized. On the contrary, the colonel's proposals are presented as a clear tendency of American history . . . "American history indicates this need."

The fact that American history until now has indicated nothing of the kind, but quite the opposite, is not mentioned. Tomorrow, thinks the colonel, it will, because tomorrow the world will be quite different than it is today.

The conclusions of Col. Lindbergh's speech are revolutionary, and it is with these conclusions that we should be concerned, rather than with his specific recommendations regarding the arms embargo.

There he followed the lead of Mr. Hoover. While in his previous speech, he warned against emotionalism and sentimentality, saying that we should be "as impersonal as a surgeon's knife," in this matter he is sentimental.

Character Of Arms Depends On Use

HE DOES NOT want to send "offensive" weapons to Europe, but would sell "defensive" ones. Here he has been adequately answered by Mr. Allen Dulles, Senator Pittman, Maj. George Fielding Eliot, Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan, and most pointedly, on Tuesday, by Walter Lippmann, who pointed out that weapons have no life of their own but are offensive or defensive, depending upon whether the governments that employ them are pursuing an offensive or a defensive policy.

The main argument of the colonel's speech is much more arresting. The Third Reich proposes to replace the world-wide system of free intercourse and free or reciprocal trade, which was maintained by the Pax Britannica from 1812 to 1914 and with which this Nation has collaborated in such policies as the open door in the Far East. It would also replace the system of collective security which foundered after the last war on inherent faults in the structure of the League of Nations and our own isolationism, but which nevertheless, together with Great Britain's systematic reform of the empire into a commonwealth of sovereign states in loose federation indicated the trend toward world federation and freedom with organization. In contrast the Third Reich proposes to divide the world into monopolistic areas, each to be claimed as the "lebensraum" (living space) or "sphere of influence" of a great power, in which it will be sovereign and dictatorial—the "master nation."

In this new Nazi imperialism all small states are to disappear, or to maintain only a "pseudo-independence." A "union of fear," according to Maj. Gen. Haushofer, always, historically, works more efficiently than a "union of love."

Thus the Third Reich theoreticians saw in Britain's placing of the dominions on a status of equality in 1926 only "the most conspicuous surrender of power" and a sign of a "flagging will to rule."

Racism Advanced As Ruling Factor

THE NAZI DOCTRINE couples this "will of the organically vital strong nations to rule over alien territories and peoples" with racism, which is candidly advanced as "the only basis from which democratic ideas can be ideologically combated. Only this basis will provide strength of will and ruthlessness and freedom from all humanitarian folly."

This is the intellectual background of the new world imperialism of the coming era Germanica. Each master nation—Germany in the first line, of course; Japan, Great Britain, Italy, the United States and now, perhaps, Russia—is to have its living space in which it rules the lesser breeds under a dictatorial system as political and economic fiefs.

Great Britain is to have the dominions, which, however, will fall away, and should she come along willingly would be offered a trade deal with Germany on colonies. Italy's "lebensraum" is to be North Africa, with France relegated to the status of a protectorate, "freed of all major political responsibilities."

And the sphere of the United States lies in the Western Hemisphere, though in just how much of the Western Hemisphere has never been made plain. In the new world redistribution to be made by the "renovating powers," Italy and Spain must be considered, and they, together with the Nazis, will have claims on South America unless the United States frees itself of humanitarian-pacifist ideals and demonstrates its "organic-biological" fitness to rule on National Socialist lines.

Concept Conflicts With Democracy

NOW IT IS against this concept of imperialism, of monopolized and controlled areas, that England and France are waging war. At every point this concept comes into conflict with democracy, which presumes fundamental human equality, and with doctrines of political and national freedom. Only the powerful are to be free in the next Nazi era. The weak are to be "protected," in the sense that they, as individuals and nations, are to be serfs of the strong.

When Col. Lindbergh says, "I do not believe this is a war over the balance of power," he begs the question. It is a war over whether the balance of power will be on the side of the trend toward world organization on the basis of equality, or on the side of the trend toward world organization on the basis of master and slave, peoples and nations.

To these ideas must be added that of the coming sovereignty of land power over sea power, and of economic monopoly in large-scale areas under state capitalism over free trade and free or partially free economy on a world-wide scale. The first is the new Germanic concept. The second, the Franco-British.

Now the important thing about Col. Lindbergh's speech is that he advocates openly and clearly that the United States should desert all the ideals of world order which have historically linked her to the western powers and advocate the new Germanic concept.

Nowhere on this soil has the Nazi concept of imperialism been so clearly stated as in Col. Lindbergh's second speech.

This column has space only to establish the frame of ideas in which the colonel's speech must be considered. The speech itself will be taken up in the next column.

A. D. A. Director To Talk in Atlanta

"Economic and Social Aspects of Public Housing" will be discussed by John Ihlder, executive director of the District Alley Dwelling Authority, at the opening session in Atlanta today of the Regional Conference on Housing Administration and Management.

Other speakers at the inaugural meeting will be Col. L. Kemper Williams, president of the National Association of Housing Officials, which is sponsoring the conference; Chairman George Hamilton of the Georgia Housing Board, and C. F. Palmer, chairman of the Atlanta Housing Authority.

Among others scheduled to address the three-day assembly are B. J. Hovde, John P. Broome and Jacob Crane, all of the United States Housing Authority; Gov. E. D. Rivers of Georgia, and Bleecker Marquette, consultant to the Cincinnati Metropolitan Housing Authority and former president of NAHO.

developing its new program as rapidly as possible."

Labor leaders and some of the Labor Department personnel attributed departure of the mild-mannered Andrews to efforts by President Roosevelt to strengthen Administration of the wage-hour act.

They recalled complaints that wage-hour enforcement had been below par, something Andrews claimed was due to lack of funds for hiring inspectors and lawyers.

Praise of Andrews came from Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, who voted against the wage-hour act and has been critical of the Labor Relations Board, and from Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, Senate Labor Committee chairman.

"Andrews was one of the best administrators of any of the Federal agencies I knew about," Burke said. "He started to enforce a new law gradually with the belief that most employers wanted to obey it. He did not try and crack down suddenly."

Senator Thomas said he thought Andrews made "a remarkably fine record," adding that "he had one of the most difficult jobs in our history and he was satisfactory."

On the other hand, one C. I. O. official said labor felt that a more vigorous swinging of the enforcement stick was needed. He said, without particularly criticizing Andrews, that he had not cracked down severely enough.

Southerners Pleased

Southern Senators, who have been protesting that the wage minimums in Southern textile plants ignored the naturally lower Southern wage levels, appeared pleased by Andrews' resignation. Recently he signed a wage order raising the textile minimum to 32½ cents an hour, effective October 24.

"I have no regrets," said Senator Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama. "I think the change is desirable."

Senator Ellender (Democrat), Louisiana, asserting Andrews had ignored Southern wage differentials, said he would "shed no tears."

Some Administration members of Congress privately attributed Andrews' resignation to disagreements with Secretary Perkins. They traced the dissension's inception to the action of Congress in March, 1938, in placing the wage-hour division's initial appropriation of $850,000 in Andrews' charge, rather than Miss Perkins'. A latter appropriation was lumped with the rest of the Labor Department's funds.

Western Security

Keeping War Away

COL. LINDBERGH'S second address has got under the skins of the British. Yet he said no more than has been thought by every American patriot who has wished to keep the New World out of the chronic struggles for power in the Old World.

Col. Lindbergh said: "Sooner or later we must demand the freedom of this continent and its surrounding islands from the dictates of European power."

That is the essence of the Monroe Doctrine and of the Western Hemispheric policy sketched by Jefferson and others 20 years and more before the Monroe Doctrine was promulgated. Under the Monroe Doctrine we consistently have taken the position that no foreign possessions in this hemisphere can change hands without our consent.

Foreign Holdings Tolerated By U. S.

WE HAVE NOT demanded the surrender of all possessions held by European powers for the simple reason given by President Roosevelt at a recent press conference—they haven't caused serious trouble. Since we dislodged Spain, foreign possessions on this side of the Atlantic have belonged to only three nations: Great Britain, France and The Netherlands. They remain only by toleration. They are, so to speak, on probation. We will not permit those possessions to be transferred to other foreign nations, no matter what may be the fortunes of war in Europe.

By the Declaration of Panama we, in partnership with all Latin-American republics, have put a further limit on European rights. We have declared that no acts of war shall be committed within waters adjacent to the Western Hemisphere, in a belt from 300 to 1,200 miles in breadth.

Another abvious corollary to the Monroe Doctrine, which would be stated if it should become necessary, is that no European power shall be allowed to establish an important naval base in this hemisphere. The British have bases at Halifax, Bermuda and the Falkland Islands, near the lower tip of the hemisphere. But none is a major fleet base. They have a naval outpost at Kingston, Jamaica, as the French have in Martinique, and the Dutch in Curacao. With the exception of the Falkland Islands all of these are easily within the control of our Navy. If any of these three European nations should exhibit signs of unfriendliness we could, and probably would, act at once.

Outlying Points Needed For Defense

WE WOULD ACT at once, also, if the British were to lose their present struggle with Germany In such event we would not limit ourselves to taking over, alone or with the co-operation of our Latin-American neighbors, the British, French and Dutch possessions in this hemisphere. Almost certainly we would also expand the Monroe Doctrine to include the islands and other areas from which the Western Hemisphere might be menaced by water or air.

Those outlying points which would be necessary to the defense of this hemisphere on the Atlantic side include the Azores, and probably the Cape Verde Islands (both Portuguese), and Greenland and Iceland (both under the Danish crown), which are the northern stepping stones across the Atlantic.

It might be sufficient to declare that we would regard as cause for war any attempt by any European power to establish an air or naval base in the Azores, Cape Verde Islands, Iceland or Greenland. It might be necessary for us to take possession of some or all of these areas, or to arrange by lease for the establishment on them of our own naval and air outposts. We would also have to consider the west coast of Africa, from which South America can be threatened. This would be a question for the military and naval experts; whether an outpost in the Cape Verde Islands and bases in Brazil and Argentina could defend South America adequately or whether, for the security of the Western Hemisphere, it would be necessary to prohibit the establishment of a major naval base on the west coast of Africa.

Canada Presents Special Problem

THERE IS NO urgent need to expand the Monroe Doctrine so far to the east as would be necessary if Anglo-French naval power were destroyed. Nevertheless there are some people in the Government who think it would be sensible to trade the war debts for Bermuda, the Bahamas and all the British and French possessions in the Caribbean, Central and South America.

Canada clearly is a special problem. The defense of Canada is an integral part of the defense of the United States. There can be no answer except "no" to Col. Lindbergh's question: "But have they the right to draw this hemisphere into a European war simply because they prefer the Crown of England to American independence?"

But any attempt by us to discourage the Canadians from going to war for Great Britain would create more problems than it would solve. They do not need to fight for their self-defense, but they have chosen to do so anyway. This is one of those anomalies which have to be accepted. However, with sensible statesmanship, we can prevent Canada's decision to fight in Europe from dragging the rest of the Western Hemisphere into the war and interfering with the long-term growth of hemispheric solidarity.

Dress Rehearsal?

By Barnet Nover

The German Offensive

TWELVE DAYS ago Adolf Hitler threatened to wage war in earnest if the Allies turned down his appeal for peace.

He soon had his answer from Messrs. Daladier and Chamberlain. Yet, for some unexplained reason, several days were allowed to elapse after the definitive Allied rejection of his olive branch before the Fuehrer made any attempt to carry out his threat. And now that a German offensive on land, at sea and in the air appears to be under way, some doubts arise as to whether this offensive is the real thing or only a dress rehearsal.

GERMANY'S reluctance to undertake the kind of an offensive that alone could overcome British and French resistance is understandable. The Allies are entrenched behind the Maginot Line, perhaps the most carefully worked out system of fortifications ever devised and manned by one of the best-trained armies in Europe. They are also entrenched behind the no-less-formidable barrier of sea power.

It may be that these barriers are not as strong as people have imagined. It may be that either or both of them can be overcome by the Third Reich without a ruinous effort. It is far more likely that the destruction either of the Maginot Line or of the blockade will prove a task beyond Germany's power. Yet Hitler cannot assume that to be the case or to act on that assumption without throwing up the sponge.

He is certainly not ready to do that. Far from it. At the same time, however, Germany cannot afford to remain indefinitely on the defensive on land and certainly not at sea. For, unless the blockade is broken, it will only be a matter of time before Germany is strangled.

HAS GERMANY sufficient power to launch a simultaneous land, sea and air blitzkrieg on the Allies? This is very much to be doubted. Even assuming the German air force to be as great as the most extravagant rumors insist it is the fact must be reckoned with that during the past year Great Britain and France have not been sitting on their hands, either. As for trained troops it is doubtful if Germany has as many men under arms as France alone, let alone France and Britain combined. In the matter of artillery neither side probably has any overwhelming preponderance over the other.

If Germany should seek to wage maximum war on all fronts at once she must now reckon with the weather factor. Within a few weeks the time for large-scale action on the Western Front will be over. An offensive to be successful must reach its objective before the bad weather sets in or at least be on the road to success.

THERE IS another factor which Hitler and his generals cannot help but take into account. That is the possibly uncertain course of Russia which so far has gained without going to war far more than Germany has won through fighting. Among the best of Allies a certain measure of mutual suspicion is inevitable. The first World War offers abundant examples of that. And Hitler has no more reason to take Stalin's good faith for granted than Stalin has to assume that Hitler will treat the German-Russian accord with any greater respect than he treated other agreements he made from 1933 to 1939.

In war there is no sharp dividing line between the diplomatic and the military. It is very probable, therefore, that the curious delay between the failure of the Hitlerian peace offensive and the beginning of the present large-scale German attacks on the French lines was the product, in part at least, of the uncertainty regarding the outcome of the Russo-Finnish and Russo-Turkish negotiations at Moscow. Some of Germany's divisions, some of her fighting strength, must obviously be kept intact no matter how great the need in the west for possible eventualities in the east.

BUT IF GERMANY decides that a frontal war on the Allies with everything she has in her possession hurled against the Maginot Line and the blockade is likely to lead to disaster, what other course can she follow?

The answer is that her offensive may be selective rather than total, undertaken with a minimum of hazard in order to achieve a maximum of results. In such category certainly belongs the sinking of the Royal Oak by a U-boat and the damaging of British warships at Rosyth in an air raid carried out by a German squadron.

If a combined submarine campaign and air offensive against the British navy and British shipping could break the blockade the results would prove decisive and yet be achieved without risking the destruction of Germany's main force.

The Rosyth and Scapa Flow raids were limited in scope, however. They suggest that Germany is only trying out the air weapon rather than really depending on it as yet as a real match for British naval power. The raids reveal no certainty that the weapon can or will be successful.

For the same reason the German offensive in the west, while involving far mre men and armaments than were engaged in the Rhine-Moselle-Saar area at any time previously, also suggests a dress rehearsal rather than a large-scale assault. The conflict in the west is no longer a sparring match. But it has not yet reached the stage of total war, either.

Unemployment Board Files for Merit System

Billings Freed, Plans to Wed Girl He Met at Hearings

Sacramento, Calif., Oct. 17 (AP).—Warren K. Billings became a free man today after having served 22 years in prison on conviction of the 1916 Preparedness Day bombing in San Francisco.

Billings, shortly before his release, said he expected to be married soon to Josephine Rudolph, librarian of San Mateo, Calif., whom he met 18 years ago at one of the numerous hearings in the Mooney-Billings case.

He received a commutation of sentence to time served, and came to Sacramento from Folsom Prison to receive personally from Gov. Olson the papers which set him free.

Gov. Olson, in commuting the sentence, said he believed Billings innocent of the bombing for which he and Mooney were convicted. Mooney received a pardon this year from the Governor.

Q. Now, then, you have pleaded guilty to killing your husband. Go and tell the story in your own way.

A. There isn't much to tell. I just shot him in the back, slit his throat and then set fire to the house.

Q. What was he doing at the time?

A. Just reading his paper.

Q. And you attacked him without warning?

A. I certainly did.

Q. How long had you been married?

A. Twenty years.

Q. And had you had much trouble?

Q. No, we got along uite peacefully.

Q. Then why did you shoot him?

A. I had a feeling I was being encircled!

Q. What do you mean by encircled?

A. I don't know, but it's a good alibi these days. If I had gone on I might even have been exploited.

Q. Were there any other reasons for creeping up on this man and brutally killing him?

A. Yes. I came to a conclusion I had minority rights which had been ignored.

Q. When did you reach this conclusion?

A. Just as I reached for the pistol.

Q. What were these minority rights?

A. For one thing, whenever my relatives visited us I didn't think he made any effort to assimilate 'em.

Q. Did he ever threaten them?

A. I was pretty sure he would partition 'em if he had his way.

Q. What made you think so?

A. Well, we had several frontier incidents.

Q. What do you mean by that?

A. He once drove my mother out of the corridor.

Q. Did you remonstrate with him?

A. Yes, but he had an explanation.

Q. What was it?

A. He called it a counterattack, with pursuit.

Judge (interrupting). Nothing shown here indicates that your husband was other than a peaceful, quiet man. I fail to see any justification for murder.

A. Oh, Judge, it wasn't murder. I never use that term. It was an incident.

Judge—But he is dead, isn't he?

A. Yes, but he had a fair chance.

Judge. What was it?

A. I offered to make him a BUFFER STATE!

Are You Pointing?

If wishful thinking really worked,
As sometimes it's been said,
I know a certain war lord
Who'd be completely dead.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Since Leaving Home 12 Years Ago, Son Is Coldly Indifferent to Mother's Love; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: After reading your splendid advice to others, I am prompted to ask it for myself. When my son left home some years ago to secure a position, I let him go with my blessing and a cheerful "good-by." Then I retired alone (as his father's business kept him away much of the time) and wept as I had never wept before. He was all we had.

I watched for letters. I had given him 25 post cards, that we might hear often. None ever came. After a long time, we had a short indifferent letter occasionally. His father and I pretended not to notice this, but wrote often and lovingly to him. After three years' absence, he married a lovely girl, whose name we did not know. We sent a generous wedding gift of money, also a telegram with our blessings. We never received any expression of thanks from him. We grieved together in silence.

After some years, a daughter was born to them on my birthday. We had known nothing of this wonderful expectancy. The following Christmas a box of exquisite clothing was sent. A letter was received from his wife, but no word from him. Then a terrible tragedy befell me. His wonderful father passed away suddenly from a heart attack. I was traveling with him and we were in a strange city at a hotel.

I sent my son a telegram, thinking he would surely come to me. He sent me a wire to proceed with the funeral there, then come to his home. No letter; no flowers, no word of comfort ever came. Of course I did not go; just pretended not to see his utter indifference. They my health failed. My doctor sent me to Mayo's.

I wrote to my son asking him to come to me. He answered that another baby was coming and he could not leave. That was all right, under the circumstances, I replied. En route, I wrote to tell him where certain things were. I had no word for six weeks; then a short letter, with no inquiry as to my progress. After my return, my doctor sent me to another hospital; no letter ever was sent there. Still I did not waver. I believe implicitly that Love is the greatest force in the world; that it endures all things and never faileth.

So, on my return I sent a handsome overcoat to him. I counted the days when a letter would surely come. That was three years ago. I have never received an acknowledgment. Then last December I decided to take the long journey to his home and spend Christmas there. I wrote them of my plans when I was halfway there, and waited for a reply. Three weeks later, when Christmas was over, I received a card from the wife, saying she would be glad to see me. Of course I did n . go on. I have not written since then. The wife has written, but never has mentioned the changed plans.

Twelve years have passed since he went away from home. I wanted so much not to grow weary of well doing; not to faint; but in due season to reap. The fault must be within me, somehow. I am so bewildered. So I am asking you to advise me, please. Shall I loose them and let them go? Or what shall I do?

FORGOTTEN MOTHER.

The Whole Story Has Not Been Told

DEAR F. M.: One might think, on first reading your letter, that your son must be unfeeling to an unnatural degree, else he could not have completely cast off two such tenderly devoted parents. Yet his implied steadfast allegiance to his wife and children refutes this theory. In view of that curious contradiction, one is constrained to believe, therefore, that the actual story has not been told. And until the whole truth has been brought to light, at least in the rough, it would be idle for even the scientifically trained analyst of human behavior to undertake to explain the situation or suggest methods for healing the breach.

Whatever comments I am able to offer, on the basis of your recital, must be pure surmise, which may or may not hit the bull's-eye. In view of the singularly sweet tone of your melancholy recital, it is with considerable reluctance that I venture to suggest that the blind instinct to preserve his sanity may have prompted your son to sever all ties with his past. In brief, he may have fled from what he conceived to be a psychological suffocating excess of clinging parental fondness.

His psycho-biological inheritance and/or training may have invested him with, and encouraged him in, pronounced neurotic trends from infancy upward; and and in his sickness he may have believed that this affliction, whatever its unfathomable nature, would be relieved if he could cut clear of the root source of psychological contamination and re-establish himself in a new environment, free of all reminder of the past.

Having made the break—with who knows what secret fears and tortured misgivings?—he may have remained consistently afraid thereafter to risk the loss of whatever superficial peace he had acquired, by renewing the perilous (to him ties of tender kinship with his parents. I have a feeling that he was (and is) running away from some nightmarish, subjective bogeyman, both in staying away and in failing to write, except tersely and at long intervals. If he were to write frequently, confidentially and at length, probably he would be inviting to the surface of his mind reminders of old horrors, of some sort, that he manages, for the most part, to keep under lock and key in the subconscious levels of recollection. It is my guess that he dare not open this Pandora's box.

In spite of the beautiful restraint with which you tell your side of the story, certain fragmentary phrases creep through which suggest that there is a taint of obsessive sentimentality in your attitude toward your son. For instance, when you went aside and "wept as you had never wept before," when he had at last gone forth on his own—as every man should. And when you say, "he was all we had;" when, obviously, you and your husband still had each other, plus the material means with which to continue a mentally and socially fruitful existence together.

And when you say, "I had given him 25 post cards, that we might hear often." Had your relations been normal and harmonious, this kindergarden type of reminder should never have seemed necessary. Equally odd is your own and your husband's attitude in "pretending not to notice, but in writing often and lovingly to him," when he failed to write. The reaction of the normally affectionate, normally expectant parent would have been rather different. Either an amiably or sharply scolding letter would have been dispatched to the offender, or one parent or both would have descended upon him for a "check-up" visit.

Strange undercurrents of hypersensitivity, of peculiar mental and emotional reservations, appear to animate all your social dealings with your son. You seem to fluctuate constantly between hungry overtures and hurt withdrawals. And this is not the attitude of a healthy minded mother toward her offspring, no matter how erratic and inconsiderate the latter's behavior may be.

There was something a bit queer about your performance in going half the distance to make an unannounced visit to him last Christmas; then pausing, writing, reconsidering and retreating back into your shell of baffled bereavement. No more queer, you may say, than his failure to come to his father's burial. And that is true. But it appears that we have here the strange son of an equally strange mother.

So long as you have the money to pay traveling expenses to his home, and so long as you have not been forbidden to come, and if your conscience is clear, it seems to me that the same thing for you to do would be to go to see him, if only to seek, from his wife and children, the loving response which he withholds. I should say it was mock heroics to speak of "loosing him and letting him go," when—apparently—your own bleeding sensitivity is largely responsible for keeping you two apart, physically at least.

If you honestly wish to know what causes this estrangement and how it may be reconciled, take your story to a spiritual adviser or phsychological consultant, and don't hesitate to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, no matter how painful the effort may be. M. H.

Reducers Should Be Careful to Include Enough Vitamin C in Their Daily Diets

WELL, the worst has happened! One of my reducers is losing her teeth! And all her "I told you so" friends assure her it's the diet—my diet, they mean.

Everything else is fine. She has been losing weight right along—27 pounds in four months, which is a satisfying but safe rate—and she has slimmed down from a size 40 to an 18.

But, for the first time in her life, she is developing tooth cavities and she writes to ask if it could be coincidence. Probably not! She has been on a diet of 900 calories a day and on this restricted diet, she goes on to say, "I ate corn, ice cream, etc., though sparingly, as they count up so quickly. Nevertheless, I did not miss any good food."

It is impossible to be on a 900 calorie balanced diet and not miss any good food. If the good foods are included you are fairly certain to miss some of the protective elements. Both cannot be included on that few calories.

Diet Not Deficient

Since this reducer drank buttermilk every day and had cheese several times a week, we know that her diet was not deficient in calcium. From her casual list of daily fare, the element most likely to have been missing is vitamin C—and that for several months. Now, unless you get sufficient vitmin C you do not efficiently utilize your calcium. This deficiency would account for dental troubles.

Vitamin D also plays an important part in the utilization of calcium but since she reduced during the summer and spent some time out of doors every day, it is assumed that she got enough vitamin D.

Witty Phrases Aid Popularity

THAT MOMENT before you make your entrance at a social gathering—or a business interview!

What a miserable moment of hesitation it can be if you are without a stock of gracious, effective phrases.

Knowing the friendly thing to say, you can enter a room full of people confidently. After greeting your hostess, add, "What a nice party this is." On seeing a friend, exclaim, "I was hoping to see you here." Meeting strangers, say graciously, "How do you do."

And you easily open the way to friendship with those strangers, if you are ready with talk-makers such as "Ethel says you have just returned from the World's Fair." "Your accent interests me—what part of the country are you from?"

In business interviews you make a good impression if you have apt business phrases ready. "Mr. Smith, I believe, has told you about me," "You will find me very adaptable," "Then I shall expect to hear from you."

And in any conversation, you appear intelligent, interesting if you can hit the nail on the head with vivid word combinations, "Under adverse conditions our sales went up," "How dapper and carefree he is."

Our 40-page booklet, "1,500 Useful Phrases," gives hundreds of effective word combinations, friendly phrases for all occasions. Helps to make your speech charming, fluent.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "1,500 Useful Phrases," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Living Room Needs Focus of Interest For Decoration

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

INTERIOR DECORATORS probably take too much for granted in planning most rooms around a fireplace. For an awful lot of us don't have fireplaces to start with . . . we don't have panoramic views through picture windows . . . in fact we don't really have anything that makes a natural center of interest or focal point in arranging the furniture. And so we just set the chairs around at random and wonder why the room doesn't quite hang together.

Of course, in the room where there's a stove or "base burner," it assumes something of the role of the fireplace in that the furniture just naturally gathers around it. At its best a stove is no Hollywood queen for looks but it does have a friendly comfortable look and imparts a sense of well being to a room. But in the modern home with central heating or inconspicuous gas heater to warm us, we can turn our thoughts to a more interesting focal point.

A big mirror is often very dramatic to use in this way, especially if a bank of greenery is massed below it to make a "flower-place." Or if music is the family interest, arrange the furniture so that most of the seating faces the piano or can easily be turned to do so. Or set your big radio-phonograph against a handsome wall hanging and group the sofa and chairs as you would around a mantel.

Spouse Hall Coming Along to Washington To Revisit Old Cronies

New York, Oct. 17.

THE DAY AFTER this is written, Spouse Hall and I shall be in Washington, the Nation's Capital, and no doubt several red-hot dispatches from that great center will be sent. I shall be down there bothering the Department of State, which seems to have enough on its hands already without poor little me. Hall will be revisiting the scenes of the crimes, for he spent the five happiest years of his life as dramatic critic for an afternoon paper in Washington, and that city is my greatest rival for his affections.

Alice Hughes

Hall, in fact, has become the perpect prototype of the old soldier. When he gets together with a crony of his Washington era, he is just an old gent on a cracker barrel, dishing up memories of the days before I staggered into his life. Of course, few of his pals still are at large to dish this aged dirt with him. Many are dead, some are in the loony-bin, and many have quietly disappeared.

For his Washington days were spent in Bud Pegler's "era of wonderful nonsense."

His best pal, Willis Thornton, now is a respectable married man out in Cleveland, and his understudy on the drama desk, Ralph D. Palmer, is here in New York, a hard-working, charming fellow still in the newspaper business. But Hall, poor old bloke, has now rounded out 20 years in the newspaper and magazine rackets, and has written millions of words, a few of which made sense. Now he is fed up and takes it out in gabbing. He wishes he knew some other way to make eating money.

I, too, love Washington, its rocks and rills, its woods and templed hills. So I guess he and I will have a pretty good time down there. He adores the place, and sometimes cries when he talks about it. He tells me how the young kids on the paper would drive their best dates around the tidal basin in a cab, only to find that their pet pals had done the same thing an hour before. Anyway, tomorrow he and I'll be in the Nation's Capital—I busy, he loafing, and crying about the days and girls that are no more. Serves him right for getting old and feeble. Serves me right for being busy.

AMONG THE HORDES of visiting firemen it is a pleasure to welcome John Steinbeck, author of the tremendous "Grapes of Wrath," and his wife. They came to visit, of all things, the fair, and he is absolutely calm about the furor caused by this book of his . . . I love the underprivileged rich. So I cry when I learn that such unhappy souls as Mrs. Barklie McKee and Mr. William K. Vanderbilt are forced to the expense of having huge American flags painted on the sides of their private yachts. Just suppose a submarine should mistake these canoes for mighty American battle-wagons! . . .

N. Y. Millionaires Have Flags Painted On Their Yachts

Gloria Swanson, and take my word for it, is now more beautiful than she was when she was a movie star. I see her often, and I admire her beauty and chic (that awful old word we call sheek). The other night at La Conga, the rumba den, she looked lovely in a black faille gown, with a mess of thin gold and sapphire bracelets on her arms . . .

As you may know, the United States are all right. Kirtsen Flagstad, the marvelous Norsewoman of the opera, has arrived safely here on a Norse ship, which means that the famous birdhouse, the Metropolitan Opera, is set for 1940, come weal, come war.

Miss Florence Harris Becomes Bride Of Donald Downs in Service Here

Official, Diplomatic and Residential Washington Turns Out by Scores for Fashionable Wedding at Sulgrave Club

By Hope Ridings Miller,

AND SO they were married. With Washington society by the hundreds witnessing the rites, Miss Florence Harris became the bride of Donald Downs yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock.

The spacious ballroom of the Sulgrave Club was the scene of the ceremony, which in plan and procedure brought to mind a similar event several seasons ago at the Cuban Embassy, when the former Miss Harris served as bridemaid for the Ambassador's daughter, Mme. Ernest Schlatter.

Like something out of a story-book was the antique, hand-carved altar, which was placed before the ballroom's center window yesterday. Six magnificent Chinese temple candelabra on either side held tapers sprouting from carved bases decorated with ferns and lilies. Gold candlesticks pointed the background for the altar, which was banked with a profusion of bridal blossoms.

While guests found their places up and down the improvised aisle marked with festooned poles, Sidney's orchestra played the musical program. The Rev. Albert J. McCartney officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, Rear Admiral Frederic R. Harris, of New York, the bride wore a gown of pearl antique satin, fashioned with long shired sleeves, a heart-shaped neckline and a court train 6 yards long, bordered with rose-point lace. Her flowing tulle veil fell from a Fra Angelico headdress, embroidered with a band of seed pearls and placed far back on her dark hair.

The bride's only ornaments were gifts of the bridegroom—a pigeon blood ruby, encrusted with diamonds, and a matching diamond and ruby brooch. A sheath of five calla lilies further accented her lovely ensemble.

Mrs. Jerauld Wright, the former Phyllis Thompson, was matron of honor. Miss Diana Rowland was maid of honor. Their frocks of rust velvet were fashioned on flowing lines and trimmed with quaint French bows. Matching ostrich plumes, holding short veils of golden-brown tulle and bouquets of henna dahlias, tied with long streamers of peach velvet, completed their costumes.

Bridesmaids were Mrs. Clifton Phillips, the former Natalie Keeney; and Miss Patricia Newmna, debutante cousin of the bride. Their gowns of peach taffeta were trimmed with rust velvet bows, and their headdresses of peach ostrich plumes and veils were similar to those worn by the other attendants. Bouquets of peach dahlias, tied with rust velvet ribbon, set off their ensembles.

Marshall O. Exnicious was best man, and ushers included William K. Ryan, Frederic Roy and Walter Abell 3d.

'Now You're Married; You Must Obey'

Following the ceremony, the wedding party proceeded immediately to the rotunda room, where they received. As the couple and their attendants took their places, Sidney's orchestra struck up the lively tune, "Now You're Married, You Must Obey."

Standing with the wedding party was the bride's mother, Mrs. Russell-Bennett and her cousin, Mrs. Richard Kevin, of New York. Mrs. Russell-Bennett was a regal picture in a draped black, floor length gown, made with a modified hobble skirt and worn with a thrown of sables and a pendant and bracelet of diamonds. Her satin felt hat was trimmed with black partridge feathers, and her shoulder corsage was of beige orchids. Mrs. Kevin was gowned in black velvet with a matching hat.

While some of the 500 guests went down the line, dancing was under way in the ballroom. The tea table in the dining room was also a center of interest, as was the smaller table, where champagne was served. At another table, the towering bridal cake, framed with urns filled with white chrysanthemums, took the spotlight.

Among those who alternated at the tea table were Mrs. Joseph Cecil, Mrs. Henry C. Rowland, Mrs. McCeney Werlich, Mrs. Victor Kauffmann, Mrs. Thomas Lockwood, Mrs. Carleton Holdrege, Mrs. Marshall O. Exnicios and Mrs. George Barnett.

Wedding Gifts On Display

Guests who stopped by for a cup of tea or a glass or champagne later went on to view the bridal gifts, which were arranged in a magnificent display. Among the presents that attracted special attention were an original George II tea service and tray, a gift of the bride's father; a fish server with gold handles, a family heirloom, given by the bride's mother; exquisite silver candelabra, fashioned about 1790, and a dozen silver service plates, handsomely carved.

Out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. James Newman, of Akron, Ohio; Miss Kathleen Kevin, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Moore and Mr. and Mrs. John Rowland, of Greenwich, Conn.; Admiral and Mrs. Archibald Parsons and Miss Parsons and Mrs. Charles O. Maass, of New York City; Mr. and Mrs. Brinkley Smithers, Mrs. Walter Abell 3d and Mr. and Mrs. Michael Francis Doyle, of Baltimore.

Diplomatic, official and residential Washington society was well represented in the throng that filled the Sulgrave Club. Escorted to a special section near the altar were several members of the diplomatic corps, including Mme. Bostrom, wife of the Swedish Minister; the Minister of Thailand and Mme. Rajamaitri; Mme. Hurban, wife of the Czech Minister; the Marchioness of Sant-Orsola; Mme. Fotitch, wife of the Yugoslav Minister, and Signora Livia Coppola.

Many Diplomats Among Guests

Among others present from the diplomatic corps were the Commercial Counselor of the Netherlands and Mme. Kleijn Molekamp, the Rumanian Financial Counselor and Mme. Boncesco, Mrs. Harold Sims, Mme. Benech and Mme. Lombard, of the French Embassy, and the Norwegian Counselor and Mme. Galbe.

Very much centers of attraction were the former United States Minister to Czechoslovakia and Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr, making one of their first partying appearances since their return to the Capital. Others in the crowd included top-flight Washington en masse, one of the largest get-togethers seen this season, when big parties are the exception rather than the rule.

Shortly after the reception the couple left on their wedding trip—destination unannounced. Traveling, the bride wore a taupe duveteen dressmaker suit, a silver cross fox cape, a small off-the-face hat of French velvet with matching accessories and a corsage of beige orchids. The couple will make their home at Downscrest, the bridegroom's Virginia estate.

Dr. Mendoza Gives Party

In his attractive Georgetown house overlooking the Potomac, Dr. Roberto Mendoza, First Secretary of the Cuban Embassy, entertained at cocktails yesterday afternoon in honor of the two Wright girls, Mary and Edith, daughters of the United States Ambassador to Havana, and Mrs. J. Butler Wright.

Guests gathered in the large drawing room completely glassed in on the river side for an excellent view. The house on Prospect avenue, which Dr. Mendoza built, is somewhat modern in design.

Many members of the younger set attended the party. Miss Diana Rowland and Mrs. Clifton Phillips arrived in their bridesmadi frocks from the Downs-Harris nuptials. Another member of the bridal party attending was Fred Roy, who had served as an usher. Miss Ann Perin, just back from New York, was there, as were Mrs. Sutherland Mayo with her two pretty nieces who are studying here this winter; Mrs. George Pulver and Charles Gaines.

The Wright sisters, who arrived here recently with their mother, are stopping at the Anchorage. Mrs. Wright will leave Washington in several weeks, but the girls will remain through the Christmas holidays.

Mrs. Grace Kanode Vickers Married To Paul Llewellyn at Washington

Of wide interest in both Virginia and the Capital was the wedding of Mrs. Grace Kanode Vickers and Paul Llewellyn which took place yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the chapel of the Methodist building in Washington. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Albert Kanode, of this city, and the late Mr. Kanode.

The bride was graduated from George Washington University and is a member of the bar admitted to practice before the Supreme Court. She is legal assistant to Alfred A. Wheat, Chief Justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia who attended the ceremony.

MR. LLEWELLYN is from Chicago but has lived in Fauquier County, Va., for the past ten years. He attended Mercersberg Academy and was graduated from Yale University. Mr. Llewellyn has been engaged in farming on his place Pen-Y-Bryn near Rectortown, where he raises pureb'ed Angus cattle.

Dr. James Shera Montgomery, Chaplain of the House of Representatives, officiated. There were no attendants. The bride wore a gray suit by Mainbocher trimmed in dyed fox. She wore a matching corsage waist clipped with sapphire, a gift of the bridegroom, which matched her engagement ring.

AMONG THOSE attending the ceremony were the bride's sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Allen; Commissioner Melvern C. Mr. and Mrs. Mason to Entertain for Clare Booth and Husband, Henry Luce

ONE OF THE most interesting parties of a so-far-not-very-thrilling season promises to be that which Mr. and Mrs. George Grant Mason will give on Friday evening in honor of lovely Clare Booth and her publisher husband, Henry Luce. Pretty Mrs. Mason, who is well known for the originality of her clothes—such as when she wore one red slipper and one green to match a sash—has a flair for giving amusing parties as well, and with two such distinguished guests of honor, whom most people would give their teeth to meet, it should be a great success.

This will be practically the only social event which Miss Boothe will attend during her week's stay here, as she is busy touching up her play, "Margin for Error," which opened on Monday.

WOMAN'S PLACE seems to be virtually everywhere these days, but Miss Boothe is one who feels that it is most certainly not at the front. She says that "everybody would only be embarrassed all around" if she went to the firing lines on her forthcoming journey to Europe as a war correspondent. She will content herself with writing stories from London and Paris and probably several of the neutral countries.

Margaret Case, who came down to be with Miss Boothe for the opening, has returned to New York, but Mrs. George T. Pettingill, a close friend, hopes she will be back again for the week-end. Miss Case, who is assistant editor of Vogue, is always being confused with Margaret Case Harriman, another New York writer, or Edna Chase, Vogue's editor.

HOLLYWOOD PARTIES are not "colossal with caviar," as readers of screenland magazines seem to think, according to Director Frank Capra, thrice winner of the Academy Award, who is in town for a visit. Furthermore, only whisky, and not champagne, flows.

Unlike Washington, white tie dinners are virtually nonexistent in Hollywood, Mr. Capra says. Entertaining there is more informal, and as for what constitutes social position—"there isn't any such thing there," he says.

Constance Bennett, Mrs. Basil Rathbone, Mrs. Sidney Lachman, Chinese wife of the director, and Ronald Colman are among the leading party givers, he reports, although the Lachmans are at present abroad. Mr. Colman goes in for small dinners, never more than 10 or 12, which are the kind Mr. Capra likes best. Most Hollywoodites—and here's a similarity with Washington society—prefer to entertain in their own homes rather than at night clubs.

TWO OF THE cleverest conversationalists of the screen colony, according to the director, are Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks. It seems that "Doug" has a wonderful "gag" for parties: he fixes his eye upon a victim, and launches seriously forth into a long, complicated and involved story, emphasized with table thumpings and finger-pointings. The story makes absolutely no sense, but "Doug" is so earnest about it that the poor listener begins to wonder if he isn't very stupid not to understand it, and pretends that he does.

Elsa Maxwell was invited everywhere during her stay in Hollywood, as the screen people found her witty and amusing, says Mr. Capra. She even got the movie stars wildly enthusiastic about acting games, which they went right on playing in the evenings even after a hard day's work at the same thing.

Mr. Capra was most eager to shoot a Capital party for his new movie, "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," but just couldn't work one into the script. Somebody was teasing him the other day about the fact that in all Washington movies, people are seen gazing out of windows at the Capitol dome from the most unlikely localities, as, for example, the Shoreham, where the dome can't be seen. Mr. Capra swears that all such details are well taken care of in his newest movie.

HOCKLEY, the home of Capt. and Mrs. Theodore Wilkinson in nearby Virginia, has become something of a hotel for men. No less than 11 bachelors have housed there while the Wilkinsons are away this winter. It is a quiet night when at least 10 do not sit down for dinner. The bachelors are particularly fascinated by the Wilkinsons' old Southern retainer, who insists on addressing each and every one of them as "colonel."

Mrs. Peacock Entertains

Carrying out her color scheme with red roses and candles on the center of the table, Mrs. James Craig Peacock had donned a red frock yesterday when she entertained at her home in Chevy Chase at a tea in honor of Miss Lillian Chenoweth, State regent of the D. Mrs. Marshall Gives 'at Home' At Fort Myer

Chief of Staff's Wife Receives Wives of Newly Arrived Officers

Mrs. George C. Marshall, wife of the Army chief of staff, was at home yesterday afternoon from 4 until 6 o'clock to wives of officers newly arrived for duty at the War Department, Army War College, the Industrial College, and the Army Medical Center.

Wearing an old rose crepe frock, tea length, Mrs. Marshall received with Mrs. Lorenzo D. Gasser, wife of the deputy chief of staff. Miss Molly Pender Brown, daughter of Mrs. Marshall, assisted generally. Her chic frock was of black.

The chief of staff's quarters at Fort Myer have been completely redecorated. The work was all done this summer while the Marshalls were at their summer place on Fire Island, N. Y.

Supervising the tea table was Mrs. Emory Adams. Pouring tea and coffee throughout the afternoon were Mrs. William E. Shedd, jr., Mrs. George P. Tyner, Mrs. James C. McGee, Mrs. George S. Patton, Mrs. George V. Strong, Mrs. Perry L. Miles, Mrs. Wallace De Witt, Mrs. John L. De Witt and Mrs. Frank M. Andrews.

Assisting at the reception were Mrs. Orlando Ward, Mrs. Omar Bradley, Mrs. Stanley Mickelsen, and Mrs. Kenneth Buchanan.

Eileen Carlin Married Here

In a setting of white chrysanthemums, palms and ferns, Miss Eileen Therese Carlin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Carlin, of Washington, was married at 10 o'clock yesterday morning to Andrew Joseph Morris, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Andres J. Morris, also of this city. The ceremony took place at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart, the Rev. Ronald J. Fannon officiating.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a Schiaparelli model of ivory slipper satin made with a fitted basque, bustle and long circular train. Her ivory tulle veil was held in place by a halo of tulle and orange blossoms and she carried an arm bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley.

Mary Carlin Is Maid of Honor

Miss Mary Cannon Carlin served as maid of honor, wearing a Lelong model of wine-colored taffeta with short puffed sleeves and a bustle arrangement. Her matching hat was trimmed with orange blossoms and she carried gold chrysanthemums.

The bridesmaids were the Misses Shirley and Elaine Morris, sisters of the bridegroom; Nancy Lang, Rita Carlin and Betty Cannon, cousins of the bride, and Mary Elizabeth Feely. Three wore peach bloom taffeta and the others Venetian blue frocks of the same material, all made like the dress of the maid of honor. Their hats were also like hers, and they carried wine-colored chrysanthemums.

William Hill, cousin of the bridegroom, was best man, and the ushers were Stephen J. Deviney, Thomas F. Deviney, Michael Doyle, George Roberti, Vincent Borgerand, and Andrew Bane, jr., a cousin of Mr. Morris.

Breakfast Follows Wedding Ceremony

A breakfast at the bride's home immediately followed the ceremony. Mrs. Carlin was attired in a fuschia velvet gown with matching accessories and Mrs. Morris wore blue and black velvet brocaded chiffon. The house was decorated with white chrysanthemums and roses, palms, and autumn leaves.

After a wedding trip to Florida, the couple will make their home at 1814 Key boulevard, Colonial Village, Va. The bride attended the Sacred Heart Academy here and is a gradute of Frederick Visitation Academy. She is president of Delta Chapter, Chi Sigma Sorority. Mr. Morris is an alumnus of St. John's College and Columbus University.

Woman's Bureau Recalls Its Beginnings At Dinner Celebrating 21st Anniversary

Capt. Milliken Presides; Louis Brownlow Tells of Staff's Formation During War, When Men Wer eFew; Dr. Harris Speaks

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

The beginning of the Woman's Bureau of the Metropolitan Police Department was recalled last night at the dinnr given at the Dodge Hotel by members of its staff to celebrate its twnty-first anniversary. Capt. Rhoda Milliken, who has been head of the bureau since 1932, presided and Louis Brownlow, president of the board of commissioners when it was formed, and Dr. Mary B. Harris, superintendent of the Federal Industrial Reformatory for Women, were guest speakers.

Mrs. Brownlow, who, with Mrs. Brownlow, is here from Chicago for a short stay, is now director of the Public Administration Clearing House in New York. He recalled that there was active opposition to the establishment of the Women's Bureau at the time the plan was suggested in 1918. Serving with him on the commission then were W. Gwynn Gardiner and Capt. H. H. Loving, acting Engineer Commissioner.

There were already several women on the police force but they were engaged at lower salaries than the men, under special appropriation. Finding nothing in the law that made any discrimination as to sex in the appointment of members of the force, it was decided to include police women on the regular staff. Other cities had them, but none had a bureau such as was proposed here.

Faced Problem During War

The Capital faced a serious need for it, said Mr. Brownlow. With the war in progress in 1918 there were few men here but 100,000 unattached women. President Wilson, Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, Raymond Fosdick, head of War Camp Training Activities and now president of the Rockefeller Foundation, were among those consulted regarding the plan.

Others whose advice was asked were a promising young lawyer (just a kid, said Mr. Brownlow), Bolitha J. Laws; Dr. William F. Snow, of the Institute of Social Higiene; Dr. William Alanson White, then superintendent of St. Elizabeths; Dr. Anna Howard Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Mrs. Helen Hamilton Gardener and Miss Maude Miner. All favored the plan.

Mrs. J. E. Spingarn was the first head of the bureau and served from September, 1918, until February, 1919, with Mrs. Mina Van Winkle as her assistant. She was succeeded by Mrs. Van Winkle, who served until her death in 1932, with the rank of lieutenant. Miss Milliken succeeded her and was the first woman to hold the rank of captain. Among the police women serving when the bureau was formed was Mrs. Louise Kelly, who is still on the staff.

Many Prominent Guests Attend

Dr. Harris, author of "I Knew Them in Prison," talked on the reformatory and on women in the in the police department.

Among other guests were Brig. Gen. C. W. Kutz, who was engineer commissioner soon after the bureau was formed; Mrs. Kutz; Maj. Daniel Donovan, District auditor; United tates Attorney and Mrs. David Pine; Mrs. M. O. Lorenz, president of the League of Women Voters; Mrs. Horace Phelps, chairman of public welfare for the Federation of Citizens Associations; Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, past president of the District Federation of Women's Clubs; Judge Fay Bentley, of the Juvenile Court; Justice and Mrs. Jesse Adkins; Mrs. Ruth Shipley, chairman of the Passport Division of the State Department; Mrs. Elwood Street; Capt. Hazel Witt, director of the Women's Division of the Cleveland Police Department, and Miss Eva Aldrich, director of that in Baltimore.

Last year a playlet was used to illustrate the work of the organization. This season, adopting a more serious tone on the grounds that "it would be unbecoming to be too kitish," department chairmen answered questions from the floor.

Mrs. Pearl B. Klein, chairman of Government and the legal status of women, explained that study of phases of family laws and also of the situation regarding the proposed new house of detention, would be undertaken by her group.

Answering a question as to whether thorough studies already been made of child welfare, Mrs. Paul H. Appleby, chairman, said more intensive study was needed in the midcity area.

The problem of handicapped children will be investigated by the department of government and education, under Mrs. Allen Moore. Mrs. David Cushman Coyle, chairman of sub-division on housing, will conduct a study of what happens to alley dwellers when their homes are condemned for clearance. Mrs. Chester Willians is chairman of the department of government and economic welfare directing this activity.

The Federal Diary:

Mellon Art Gallery, to Be Staffed by Civil Service, Schedules Its First Examination

By Alfred Friendly

Announcement yesterday of a civil service examination for the positions of curator of sculpture and assistant curator, in the Andrew Mellon-endowed National Gallery of Art, brought to light a curious and hitherto overlooked fact. At the time he donated his fortune to the gallery the late financier insisted that the persons employed be hired under civil service regulations.

As a result, only four or five top positions in the great gallery now rising on Constitution avenue will be selected directly by the administering board of trustees. The rest, about 200, will be from the civil service rolls.

The circumstance is of peculiar significance at this time, when the President's Committee on Civil Service, headed by Supreme Court Justice Stanley Reed, is debating the problem of whether top technical and highly specialized professional personnel can be recruited via civil service.

In Mr. Mellon's mind, however, when he provided for the unique marriage of a private fortune to a civil service regimen, there was apparently no doubt as to feasability of the system.

Consequently, the examination for the curator of sculpture will be the first of a long series. Curators in other branches of art, all the junior, assistant and associate curators, and the research scholars in various fields of aesthetics, not to mention the custodial and guard staff, will be chosen by civil service examinations.

For the technical positions the examinations undoubtedly will be "unassembled," that is, the experience, background and qualitative factors of applicants' pasts will be stacked up and compared, competitively. But the applicants will not be "assembled" for written tests.

Jacob Crane, assistant administrator of the United States Housing Authority, has assembled figures to show that the much-heralded European public housing ventures at no time reached the proportions of our own Government-financed dwelling construction.

Announcing a new figure of 65,000 family dwelling units which the USHA will have put into construction in 1939, Crane compares it to the peak year of the widely publicized postwar British program, when 16,000 dwellings went into construction. In Sweden, he says, the program probably never exceeded 2,500 units in a single year; in Holland, not more than 10,000; in France, 3,500, and in Austria, very active at one time in public housing, not more than 10,000 in the peak year.

The 65,000 record also makes past American ventures in public housing relatively small, Crane holds. The Government housing program of the World War produced only 18,000 dwelling units, and the whole PWA housing division only 22,000, he estimates.

The Commerce Department, under pressure of the European War emergency, is planning to expand its weekly statistical reporting on the Nation's economic situation from 25 to 50 per cent.

At present, in its weekly "Survey of Current Business," the department publishes some 2,100 statistical series. It hopes to expand these by adding from 500 to 1,000 more tables, on production of various items, amounts of new orders, unfilled orders on hand, inventories, shipments and sales. It thus will keep the governmental finger closely pressed to the pulse of almost every industry from aard-vark feathers to zithers.

Civil Service Examinations: Tugmaster, Norfolk Navy Yard, $2,020 annually; senior medical officer, medical officer, associate medical officer for Public Health Service, Veterans Administration, Civil Aeronautics and Indian Office, $3,200 to $4,600. Agricultural economist, also principal, senior, associate and assistant, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, $2,600 to $5,600. Analyst, also head, principal, senior and assistant analyst, Bureau of Economic Regulation, Civil Aeronautics, $2,600 to $4,600.

Police Rules Adopted in Montgomery

Manual Accepted By Commissioners Governs Operation And Firearm Use

Montgomery County police for the first time have definite rules and regulations for their conduct, following adoption of a 10,000-word manual yesterday by the Montgomery County commissioners.

The manual became effective immediately after adoption by the county commissioners and printed copies will be distributed to each policeman for his guidance.

The work represents intensive effort on the part of Peyton B. Whalen, police civil service commissioner; Ralph H. Chase, executive secretary to the president of the board; the law firm of Simpson & Simpson, counsel to the commissioners; Police Chief Charles M. Orme, and other county officials.

Based on Other Manuals

It is based largely on manuals used by Washington and Baltimore police departments, altered to meet conditions in the county, and will govern police in virtually all of their duties.

As a result of adoption of the manual, the police trial board will have definite regulations upon which to base charges of misconduct and neglect.

Adoption of the manual marks another step in the evolution of a metropolitan police department for the county. The development began with placing the force under civil service, establishment of a trial board, provision of a retirement fund, and putting the men under the provisions of the workmen's compensation law. Montgomery County is the only county in the State which makes this provision.

The manual establishes three police districts, provides that headquarters shall be at Rockville, with substations at Silver Spring and Bethesda, and permits establishment ment of other substations when needed.

Firearm Use Defined

Control of the force is placed in the hands of the chief of police, who is charged with maintaining discipline and efficiency. Each substation is to have a commanding officer and a deputy commanding officer.

Use of a revolver and other firearms is restricted to defense or to protect another from death or serious injury; to arrest a convicted felon in the policeman's presence or when he has reasonable grounds to believe that the person he is attempting to apprehend is guilty of of a felony, and to killing dangerous animals or injured animals.

The policeman must make a written report to his superior officers whenever he fires a revolver.

Policemen are prohibited from smoking while in view of the public and from drinking while in uniform, either on or off duty, and are specifically cautioned against infringing the rights of any prisoner. Station clerks are required to inspect all prisoners once each half hour and are responsible for the care of the prisoners.

Report Regulations

The manual definitely prohibits police from refusing to accept a report of a violation because it is in another precinct, but they must accept the report and forward it to the proper substation.

County police are required to make complete reports on all matters investigated, and the reports must be placed in books open to public inspection at all times.

Policemen are charged with observing the condition of streets and highways and with reporting holes and obstructions and keeping watch on all building activities to ascertain whether proper permits have been obtained.

The manual also provides procedure for the police trial board and provides for protection of accused policemen through the privilege of summoning witnesses and being represented by an attorney.

Candidate Urges Arlington Rule Area Near Airport

John Paul Jones, independent candidate for Commonwealth's attorney in Arlington County, last night scored Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence Douglass for alleged failure to take jurisdiction over a cafeteria on the Jefferson Davis Highway, near the Washington Airport.

Speaking before the Bon Air Citizens Association in the Bon Air Community House, Jones charged that the Commonwealth's attorney had ordered county police to patrol the highway but to keep away from the restaurant.

Unless the county acts quickly to assure itself jurisdiction over the "no man's land," Jones said, the Federal Government will step in and take it over for the National Parks Service. Loss of jurisdiction would mean loss of thousands of dollars in taxes to the county, Jones asserted.

V.P.S. Plans New Plant In Alexandria

New Company Set Up to Construct $2,000,000 Steam Generating Station

M. J. O'Connell, president of the Virginia Public Service Co., announced yesterday a new company had been organized to construct a $2,000,000 steam-generating station in Alexandria. Of 15,000 kilowatt capacity, the new plant is to be erected adjacent the V. P. S. station in Alexandria to provide additional power in the Alexandria-Arlington area.

Granted a charter by the State Corporation Commission in Richmond yesterday, the new company, Virginia Public Service Generating Co., listed the same officers and directors as those of the Virginia Public Service Co. O'Connell said construction would get under way shortly after the program was formally approved by the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Alexandria City Council.

5 Counties to Be Served

The new plant is expected to take care of the growing demands in Northern Virginia, O'Connell said. According to the charter, the new company plans to serve Alexandria, Arlington, Fairfax, Prince William, Loudoun and Fauquier.

"In the Alexandria-Arlington area," O'Connell pointed out, "the rapid growth of population is putting constantly increasing demands on existing power facilities. Many thousands of new customers have been added in the last thre years, and there is every indication that the rapid rate of growth wil continue.

"Additional power demands will come from the torpedo plant to be opened in Alexandria in the near future, and the new airport at Gravelly Point, now nearing completion."

Reviews Other Work

O'Connell said a $750,000 addition to the Alexandria station was made three years ago. He also said that a new boiler is being provided in the Hampton plant at Newport News. Facilities also will be needed in the main generating plant at Bremo Bluff, Va., O'Connell predicted.

The charter fixes the maximum capital stock at $500,00, and the minimum at $1,000. All the stock will be common, with a par value of $100 a share. Listed as officers besides O'Connell are F. A. Mitchell, vice president; J. M. Costello, secretary-treasurer; O'Connell, Mitchell, Gilpin Willson, jr., W. H. Schwarzschild and Jay W. Johns(directors.

Future Danish Naval Officers Sail Into Annapolis Harbor

Full-Rigged Training Ship With 50 Students Anchors Off Academy After Perilous Sea Trip of 39 Days

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Oct. 17.—History turned backward a hundred years today in the day of full-rigged ships and tar-palmed sailormen when the Danish training ship Danmark sailed up Chesapeake Bay to anchor off the Naval Academy.

First Mate Knud Langevad, second in command, explained that Danish cadets must spend a year in sail before they can study to become officers in the merchant marine.

"We don't think a man can be a real seaman until he's shipped in sail," Langevad explained simply.

The youngsters, from 15 to 22 years old, learn the traditions and requirements of the sea the hard way, the old way, aboard the Danmark.

Sails go up by manpower, with half a hundred brawny youths grunting at the ropes. Boats come up from the sea to the davits the same way, with cadets taking the place of modern winches.

The Danish kids, for the most part, are blond, blue-eyed and robustly healthy. They do all the work aboard ship, standing four-hour watches at the myriad tasks a sailing ship provides, from helping in the galley to aiding the engineer.

"And the steward says every one of them eats his weight every day," Langevad said.

Officers aboard include the master, Capt. Knud Lauritz Hansen, known as one of the best racing sailormen afloat; First Mate Langevad, half a dozen junior officers a year out of navigation school, a surgeon, and an instructor. There are also a baker, a cook, and an engineer aboard, but the cadets do the work. The ship is a schoolroom from mizzentop to keel, where they learn by doing.

Even American Navy officers, from a Navy where cleanliness is a tradition and a fetish, remarked on the ultra-cleanliness of the Danmark when they came aboard to pay their respects. Woodwork was scoured until the grain stood out. Metal gleamed wherever there was metal.

The Danmark will remain here until Friday or Saturday. She made the crossing from Copenhagen to New York in 39 days during the first month of the war. A Danish flag was painted large on her white sides.

Board Urges Expenditure Cut To Balk Anne Arundel Tax Hike

Commissioners Call on Departmental Heads to Slash Costs or County Faces Levy Increase of $0.35 Per $100

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 17.—Anne Arundel County commissioners called on all county department heads today to slash their appropriations authorized by the Legislature to prevent a big jump in the county tax rate.

Facing what they termed a tax crisis, the commissioners said a drop in assessed valuation in the county combined with increased appropriations granted by the Assembly would force a tax increase of about 35 cents on $100 of assessed property.

The Legislature authorized increased expenditures for county police, volunteer fire departments, the Annapolis Library and several other county departments.

Unless a portion of these appropriations are sacrificed, the commissioners said, the increase will be voted.

Tax Assessor George Cromwell said the assessed valuation in the county had dropped almost $1,000,000. Contributing to the decrease was removal by the Pennsylvania Railroad of $400,000 in rolling stock.

Adding to the financial problem is the general election in 1940, which will cost about $35,000.

The commissioners asked that all new appropriations be waived and other expenditures reduced as much as possible before publication of the budget and 1940 tax rates November 1.

A reduction from $5 to $3 a day in the wage of election workers also is under consideration. Commissions said the reduction would cut $10,000 from the 1940 election bill.

Md. Citizens Object to 'Feeder' Line

Prince Georges Body May Appeal on Beltsville, Riverdale, Branchville Service

Members of Prince Georges County's Joint Committee on transportation said yesterday they would not accept the Public Service Commission's approval of "feeder" streetcar service between Beltsville, Branchville and Riverdale in non-rush hours as final.

W. F. Mulligan, chairman of the citizens committee representing the area served by the Capital Transit Co., said a meeting of the group would be called within the next few days to consider what action to take.

He pointed out that an appeal could be taken from the Service Commission's decision to the Circuit Court or an injunction could be sought in the Federal Court. Mulligan said:

Proposal Called Adequate

"We don't believe we have heard the last of the Transit Co.'s requests. We have been informed that the company intends to reduce the length of our zones from 3 miles to one and a half, to standardize fares at 5 cents per zone and to take away our weekly passes and give us instead a 12-pass ticket."

In approving the "feeder" streetcar service requested by the Transit Company, the Public Service Commission termed the proposal "reasonably adequate, safe and convenient."

In addition to the "feeder" streetcar service, operating from the newly constructed terminal in Mount Rainier, the company originally requested permission to install "feeder" buses on all its lines in the county at all hours of the day.

Request Withdrawn

This request was withdrawn a month ago in the face of stern opposition from organized civic and municipal groups in the county. The first hearing on the company's extensive plans for reorganizing transportation service in the suburban Maryland communities was held in June. The matter was before the commission for several months.

After the company had withdrawn most of its proposals concerning the buses, the commission held a second hearing September 27 on the balance of the utility's reorganization program. Yesterday's decision by the service commission was on the basis of this latter hearing.

23 Fires Reported

The report of Arlington County Fire Chief A. C. Scheffel, released yesterday by County Manager Frank C. Hanrahan, shows 23 fires in September, with a loss of $425. Six were house fires, two sheds, eight grass blazes, six automobiles, and one false alarm.

Frank Capra Hand-Picks Candidates for Senate

Solons in 'Mr. Smith' Will Look Real; Britain in No Hurry for Stars' Return; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

MANY PEOPLE wonder how Frank Capra manages to make so many pictures that win the Academy Award and, since he does, why his pictures come along so far apart. The two circumstances, of course, bear a close relationship.

Not only does the sagacious Mr. Capra devote punctilious personal attention to every aspect of his production, but he even goes so far as to rewrite the scripts of his plays on the set and otherwise engineer improvements as he goes along with the intricate business of articulating bullet-proof screen plays. Frequently this is a bit disconcerting to his associates, but the method obviously gets results.

BELL

Something of the Capra capacity for perfecting every detail of his camera dramas is conveyed to me by James D. Preston, Assistant United States Archivist and for years superintendent of the Senate press gallery, who acted as technical adviser for the pivotal scenes of "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," which take place under the dome of the United States Capitol. The careful selection of the actors impersonating members of the Senate intrigued Mr. Preston no end, and no wonder.

The choice was based on an accurate determination of what a composite of the Senate membership actually is like. A typical age, height, weight, complexion and whatnot was arrived at and rigidly adhered to in the casting. The Senate scenes utilized something in the neighborhood of 1,100 extras, but the personnel of the upper house was not blanketed by any mass requisition plopped into the lap of Central Casting Office. It was hand-picked.

So among the celluloid solons are to be found such veterans of stage and screen as Harry Carey, as the President of the Senate and Vice President of the United States; Edwin August, who was in Mary Pickford's early pictures and played with Edison Films as early as 1909; Brandon Beach, a former Washingtonian, who once was a soprano soloist at St. John's Church in this city; Frederick Burton, veteran player who was in George Ade's "College Widow" and played a year in London in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and later in "Coquette;" Tom Dempsey, a brother of the proprietor of the Georgetown boathouse that has so simplified the romantic business of canoeing on the Potomac; Harry Harris, father of Phil Harris and himself at one time a member of Sousa's Band; Harry Hilliard, remembered in the companies of Washington's Eugenie Blair, and John Ince, brother of the late Thomas Ince and Ralph Ince and one-time producer of "Westerns."

No "Freshmen" on Floor

And that is only a beginning. Wright Kramer, who once comprised the "second company" of Burton Holmes' travelogues, is one of Mr. Capra's Senators, as are Charles Meakin, close kin, I believe, of Manager Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's; Philo McCullough, a former star of Fox and First National pictures and before that a stage player; Grant Mitchell, the original "Tailor Made Man" and still a popular screen player, last seen here in "On Borrowed Time;" Wedgewood Nowell, in pictures since 1915; Al Pollet, technical adviser on French films; Lou Payne, husband of the late Mrs. Leslie Carter; Jack Richardson, the gelatin "beau" of 20 years ago; Robert Walker, nephew of Robert Hilliard; H. B. Warner, Minor Watson, former member of the National Theater Players, and Larry Wheat, a star as far back as the stage comedy of "Going Some."

The patriarch of "Mr. Smith's" Senate is Frederick Vroom, 81 years old, who was in the supporting companies of Booth and Barrett. Edmund Cobb, playing at being a Senator, actually is the grandson of Edmund G. Ross, a former United States Senator from Kansas, whose vote was vital in the Andrew Johnson impeachment.

So now perhaps you will be able to perceive in part why Frank Capra's films are as good as they are, and—since this is written on Tuesday afternoon in advance of the Press Club preview in Constitution Hall last night—why "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" is probably as good as I expect it to be. And thanks to you, Jim, for the dope.

This should go down in the books as Washington's "at home" week. Over and above the celebrities here for "Mr. Smith," Victor Saville, noted English producer, now associated with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's British studios, who was associate producer of both "The Citadel" and "Goodbye, Mr. Chips," arrived in the Capital over the American Air Lines yesterday morning. Tomorrow, Dick Powell will be here as guest of the Arkansas Society, arriving by train at 8:50 a. m., to be welcomed by Senator Hattie Caraway and an Arkansas delegation—he was born in Little Rock—and Ann Rutherford also will arrive to begin her week of personal appearances at Loew's Capitol on Friday. All sorts of gay goings-on planned for them all.

The Post gets around. No sooner had he received his copy yesterday morning than Alan Harvey Senie, Gildersleeve Hall, University of Virginia, at Charlottesville, called up the Loew organization recommending himself as a collegiate candidate for one of the "Romeo" roles for that evening of gadding about with Ann Rutherford. If the local campus Lotharios are too modest, it seems there can be importations.

The Mount Vernon, open-air, automobile theater, on the Richmond highway below Alexandria, announces the closing of its current season—and one of its most successful—on next Sunday night, October 22. It is much obliged for all that patronage.

From the RKO-Radio studios in Los Angeles:

"Dear Mr. Bell: I am writing this note to tell you how happy Miss Neagle and I were to have met you again on our tour with 'Nurse Edith Cavell.'

"Having advised you that we were returning to England, I feel you should know that we have been told by the authorities to carry on with our work here until such time as our services are needed on the other side. This rule not only applies to Miss Neagle and myself, but to other British artists playing in American films. Apparently there are plenty of volunteers in England for any niche we could fill. Therefore, we are now in Hollywood, recuperating and looking over story material in the event that we are given any extended time to remain here. I will keep you fully advised of our movements.

"Miss Neagle joins me in sending kindest regards.

"Sincerely yours,

(Signed) "HERBERT WILCOX."

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Oct. 17 (INS).—A far cry from the tragic story of "Nurse Edith Cavell" to the gay musical comedy, "Irene." Yet that's the leap Anna Neagle is taking in her next picture, to be produced for R-K-O by Herbert Wilcox. This is the first modern story Miss Neagle, who has appeared as "Victoria the Queen," "Nell Gwynne" and many other historical characters, has made in five years. But she'll sing and dance and wear modern attire in "Irene."

LOUELLA PARSONS

The original music by Harry Tierney, with the exception of the popular "Alice Blue Gown," will not be used. Instead, Mr. Tierney will write a complete new musical score. Alice Duer Miller is flying out to write the adaptation of "Irene," which Mr. Wilcox calls a comedy with music instead of a musical comedy.

Mirian Hopkins, back just a week from Reno, where she obtained her freedom from Director Anatole Litvak, checked in at Warners today to costar with Errol Flynn in "Virginia City." They tell me at Warners that this is official. Olivia de Havilland, who had already started fitting her wardrobe and testing makeup for this picture, is out because she plays a Southern girl in "Gone With the Wind," soon to be released, and Hal Wallis does not think it is a good idea for her to have two Southern roles in a row. Miriam sings and dances, and when I registered surprise, I was reminded that she used to be a musical comedy star and danced with the best of them until she broke her ankle.

Takes a lot of character to have the courage of your convictions in Hollywood, but sometimes it pays in the long run as it did in the case of Rita Hayworth. The critics said after she played in "Only Angels Have Wings" that she deserved better breaks. Rita took them at their word and turned down dozens of screen plays Columbia offered her because she was determined not to accept insignificant roles. Showed she was wise, because today she was given the lead opposite Tony Martin in "Passport to Happiness." She will dance for the first time since, as a member of the famous Cansino family, she changed her name to Hayworth. She was originally discovered when she was dancing at Agua Caliente.

Chatter in Hollywood: One of the Marquis de la Falaise's Hollywood friends, who asks that his name be kept secret, has had a letter from France that the debonair marquis is in the front line trenches with the French army. Wonder if that won't delay the divorce action Constance Bennett planned to bring against him. For several years she has been trying to obtain her freedom, but because of the large financial settlement due to community property laws in France and in California, it has been held up. When Connie returned from Europe a few months ago she told friends that the suit would be brought in America—and very soon.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at Random: The Sonja Henie-Alan Curtis twosome no longer is a public stunt. They couldn't have been happier dancing in the florentine room at the Beverly Wilshire; Jack Oakie has gained back the 45 pounds he lost, but he doesn't care since he plays a heavy-jowled dictator in the Chaplin movie and can stand a little flesh; Mary Healey and Franchot Tone are back together again and spent an evening dining at the house of Murphy and dancing at the night spots; Cesar Romero will spend a week's vacation at Coronado; Lupe Velez' father remains critically ill in Mexico; Jane Wyman and Ronald Reagan say they will marry soon, but then you never can tell in Hollywood.

Cary Grant still has a lease on Constance Talmadge's beach house until May. Randy Scott, who has been living with him, will probably take it off his hands. Meanwhile, he is getting the Norma Talmadge house he bought in ship-shape and it will either be marriage to Phyllis Brooks or an announcement that they are already wed.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

French Film Of Family Life At the Little

'Heart of Paris' Is A Droll Adventure, Admirably Played

French family life, now so cruelly disrupted, forms the setting for the Little's fine, new, first-run "Heart of Paris."

It is played with humor and understanding by Raimu, Michele Morgan and a company of those naturalistically inclined Frenchmen who bring so much innate cultured frugality to their cinemas. Things being what they are, there will not be many more films of such caliber to cross the waters from this side of the Maginot Line for some time to come.

"Heart of Paris" is the English title for the original "Gribouille," which one's Petit Larousse will fumblingly describe as "simpleton." But this Parisian "gribouille" has a more delicate implication: our hero is one of those whom Hollywood calls "the young in heart." A trusting idealist, he fumbles spasmodic efforts to be practical. A good deed puts him in a spot.

Raimu is a character actor remembered from many importations, a sort of Gallicized Wallace Beery, as rugged as the American star, but with more tender sensibilities. He plays a middle-class shopkeeper, married to one of those silently voluble combinations of prudence and effusion with which France abounds. His is a happy home; a son and daughter, both of marriageable age, help them with the sports shop.

Precipitates Odd Situation

His civic pride is something immense when he is called to serve on jury duty in a murder trial. Convinced of the innocence of the defendant, he changes the arrogance of the jury, much as Helen Hayes does in "Ladies and Gentlemen." The defendant is a lovely girl, however, and he offers to help her get a new start in life. To the mystification of his wife and family he takes her into the shop, where a situation develops which parallels that of her trial.

Most endearing quality of an endearing film is the shy humor it derives from its gruff figure-head. His questions from the jury box, in a court scene the legally-minded will find chuck-full of odd information, are pointedly successful and his comments on finding a fellow-juror, a free-thinker no less, in church on Christmas Eve are typically sly. Furthermore, the essential Frenchness of the piece, from the musty clutter of the shop to the chorals, which American ears will recognize as "Angels O'er the Fields," make this droll adventure a realistic one.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Oct. 17.—In Mark Hellinger's eye-witness account of the "Roaring Twenties" Warners have not only caught the spirit of that era but make the most of a popular song that has become the national anthem of heartbroken lovers. Throughout the background of this rough and tumble picture you hear the plaintive strains of "Melancholy Baby"—a song that never fails to send a shiver up and down my spine. For the story behind the birth of this classic is almost as famous as the sob-song itself. . . .

There's a Brenda in Arizona, a one-horse and cow path town that neither Brenda Frazier, Marshall or Joyce claim as their birthplace (and vice-versa). Might be cute idea if one of the Brenda pictures was previewed there.

Now that Miriam Hopkins has a divorce decree permitting her to be known as Miriam Hopkins again, it brings up the line an announcer, noted for making commercial comments, used when he proposed: "If our marriage is not entirely satisfactory your name will be cheerfully refunded!"

Father Flanagan refused to pose with Betty Grable when they both arrived in Hollywood on the same day! Before Mae West starts at Universal she might try to get herself pictured with Father Flanagan—she made it with Dr. Buchman of M. R. A.—remember? There seems to be great mystery concerning Charles Laughton's infected ear, but his wife, Elsa Lanchester, told me the infection started when liquid rubber dripped off his "Hunchback" make-up and lodged in his eardrum. He suffered intense pain for days and doctors feared he might lose his hearing until they discovered the source of the infection.

Why all this ranting about Marlene Dietrich singing barroom ditties in "Destry Rides Again"? If you step into almost any one of the Hollywood record shops you can buy wax discs of Marlene singing "Who Ist Der Mann" and "Johnny" in German and "Assez" in French—in any language plenty naughty numbers! And this isn't OFF the record either! Marlene's got the studio dizzy with her gifts—gave that wizard of sound, Bernard Brown, a platinum watch and to Charles Previn, a gold tuning fork—and does he know how to use it! Now that he's a dignified married man Maxie Rosenbloom wants his pals to call him MISTER Slapsie Maxie!

Mitch Leisen is one of our top-flight directors. 'Mongst other successes he directed "Midnight" for Paramount, also "Remember the Night." But the night he'll really remember will be November 6 when his wife, Sandra Gahle, will startle Hollywood biggywigs by singing Rigoletto with Lawrence Tibbett, Lily Pons, and Martinelli at the opening of the Los Angeles Grand Opera season. Sandra has long awaited this event—for we who know her rare talents also know she prefers to break into pictures on the strength of her voice and not by the importance of her husband.

Brown Knight Wins Feature at Laurel

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Joe Louis must be a light sleeper indeed if he is losing any restful winks over the prospect of having to battle Pat Comiskey in the near future. Comiskey, the young Jerseyman whom Gene Tunney has tabbed as the most serious threat to Louis' title, is as green as an emerald. But he's no jewel.

POVICH

Sometime, perhaps, young Comiskey will emerge as something of a fighter, but the other night in his display at Turner's arena, he was plain crude. Against Joe Hill, who couldn't punch his way through a soda cracker, Comiskey didn't show to advantage. He knew how to punch, but he never knew when. He had a half-dazed light heavyweight on his hands after the second round, but he couldn't stop him until the eighth.

Comiskey has won 23 straight fights, 21 of them by knockouts, and it is not surprising. The 19-year-old Irishman can hit. He's one of the finest young straight punchers these eyes ever beheld, but against Hill he was dancing away when he should have been wading in, and he was punching furiously when he should have been standing off and measuring his man for the single punch that would have won him the fight by a knockout.

His punching is truly refreshing. He threw a straight right potent enough even to knock out Joe Louis, or at least knock him down, but his punching power is profaned by his utter lack of ring lore. Perhaps Comiskey simply isn't smart. After 22 fights he should show to better advantage. He hasn't the slightest semblance of a defense or any idea of how to carry his chin or his hands. Hill reached him repeatedly with lefts and rights. Joe Louis wouldn't punch Comiskey repeatedly. He'd hit him just once nad then tell Comiskey's handlers to "come and git him."

Necessity Forces Pro Owners to Sell

The National Football League is beginning to show some of the ills that are besetting big league baseball, especially the American League. The stars are gravitating to the richer clubs. The Pittsburgh Pirates' sale of Sam Francis to the Brooklyn Dodgers yesterday ought to be regarded as a painful affair by the Pro League.

Art Rooney, owner of the Pittsburgh club, can scarcely be blamed. The Francis deal was virtually a forced sale. With the Pirates in the ruck of the league and attendance at home games none too good, Rooney had to acquire money to meet his payroll, even at the sacrifice of the outstanding star on his team.

Last year the same sort of a condition obtained at Pittsburgh. Rooney, one of the less affluent club owners in the league, was paying Whizzer White the top salary in pro football—$15,000. After the first few games when it was increasingly evident that the Pirates would not be a contender for any title, Rooney had to unload to keep down expenses. He sold Frank Filchock to the Redskins for cash.

The National Football League club owners ought to be alarmed. Pittsburgh, beaten in Washington, 44-14, last week, next Sunday faces the prospect of a return game with the Redskins at Pittsburgh without Francis in the lineup. Pittsburgh, with more than half of the season remaining, already is washed up as far as attendance is concerned. The Pirates are a drag on the entire league.

At Washington last Sunday, the Pirates had only 12 substitutes on their bench because the club could not afford to carry more. They were meeting a Redskin team with 19 substitutes. The league ought to devise some sort of a rule to compel teams to carry a full complement of players and thus insure, in a degree, at least a half-decent sort of contest.

Pimlico Special Winner Almost a Certainty

The Pimlico Special, born last year with the staging of the War Admiral-Seabiscuit race, loses a bit of lustre this season. When the field of four go to the post on November 1, the result will probably be a foregone conclusion.

Challedon is the only 3-year-old of any importance to withstand the rigors of training. Johnstown and Eighty Thirty were retired with assorted ailments and the best that Pimlico could dig up to oppose Challdon were Cravat, Kayak II and Isolator. The race is merely being perpetuated. It doesn't bear any semblance to a contest at this writing.

Challedon is a stand-out in the small field, despite the fact that all of the others laso favor the mile and three-sixteenths distance. But making Challedon even more of a favorite are the weight-for-age conditions of the race. As a 3-year-old, Challedon will carry 120 pounds. As older horses the others will carry 126.

There isn't any reason for belief that his rivals could come close to beating Challedon at equal weights, let alone conceding him 26 pounds. The race is for the "horse-of-the-year" title, but with Challedon a solid stand-out, no race is needed to decide any such title.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Oct. 17.—Notes so hot:

Sid Luckman, one of the greatest passers in college football history, and a great runner, neither passes nor runs with the Chicago Bears . . . He block. . . . Bing Crosby has been buying heavily into South American thoroughbreds. . . . Marius Russo, the new Yankee lefthander, will marry November 4.

CONSIDINE

Lou Gehrig and Mayor LaGuardia, his political sponsor, first became friends last July 4 at Gehrig Day. . . . "Come down to the office and see me," the mayor invited Lou. . . . Gehrig didn't see the Little Flower again until the world series but LaGuardia hadn't forgotten his original desrie to do something for Lou. . . . The Iron Man's appointment to the parole board came as a complete surprise to Ed Barrow, Yankee boss. . . . Lou will make a good parole judge, if the job demands good hard common sense as wel las a heart.

The Yanks have been fortunate in the release of three of their greatest players—Ruth, Lazzeri and Lou. . . . Ruth, badly advised, applied for McCarthy's job and resigned as an alternative. . . . Lazzeri leaped at a shaky berth with the Cubs, saving the club the embarassment, and perhaps censure, of discharging him as useless . . . and now Lou.

Guckeyson in West Point's Doghouse

Bill Guckeyson, former Maryland star, is temporarily in the doghouse at West Point. . . Sam Snead needed two blood transfusions after the operation he underwent this summer. . . . Henry Armstrong fights Richie Fonaine in Seattle Friday night, Hank' second defense of his welter title in seven days. . . He'll fight once again before he meets Lou Ambers, lightweight champion, December 1.

Al Weill, who manages Ambers and who doesn't particularly want him to fight Armstrong for the welter crown, |because if Lou wins then it will be difficult for Al to get welter title-matches for Lou's welterweight stablemates, Al Nettlow and Jimmy Leto) suggests that either Nettlow or Leto be matched against pedro Montanez, the winner to meet Armstrong for the title.

Alabama Poly, commonly called Auburn, will play its first game at home since 1935 when it meets Florida on the November 30 Thanksgiving. . . . Jack Meagher, formerly of Notre Dame, is the school's coach, and they like him so much that Poly no longer wants a cracker.

Cyril Walker, former U. S. Open champion, is in very bad shape. . . . His case suggests that the P. G. A. needs a fund similar to the one which takes care of indigent ball players and fighters.

Werber 'Inspired' Dahlgren—Maybe

On the practice fields at West Point the uprights of the goals are placed very close together, to improve the accuracy of the kickers. . . . But the Cadets missed a field goal try and an extra point boot Saturday, in the presence of the standard-sized goals, and had to be content with a tie against Columbia. . . . Benny Lenoard writes that Johnny Paycheck, the new heavy is a great prospect. . . .

Bill Cunningham, Boston sportswriter, alternatively guffaws and shakes his gold-beeaded cane at us for writing that Babe Dahlgren played harder than usual in the World Series because he had a long standing dislike for Bill Werber, of the other side. . . . We only had Babe's word for it, and we perversely prefer that to Bill's. . . . Arturo Godoy, the rough and tumble Chilean who is coming here to fight Louis, first became interested in fighting the night his peon neighbors sood for hours near the village's lone telegraph key to hear the result of the Dempsey-Firpo fight.

Frank Filchock, of the Redskins, has completed 14 out of 18 passes in the last two games. . . . This should do more to bring Sammy Baugh out of sick-bay than the entire Mayo Clinic could.

Quaker Neck Purse Winner Pays $14.90

Jockey A. Robertson Brings 4-Year-Old In Ahead of Favorite

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 17.—Jockey Alfred Robertson gave Brown Knight, a $14.90 shot, a million dollar ride today and the 4-year-old son of Hourless and Dorothy Page responded by annexing the Quaker Neck Purse, a good claiming race that was the best of the day's program. Allowing Brown Knight to choose his own stride and guiding him wide for racing room, Robertston judged the race well and Brown Knight charged to the finish line a length and a half in advance of a photo finish for second money.

The Shandon Farm's Syracuse was second, ahead of H. G. Bedwell's Teddy Patic.

Brown Knight ran the mile and a sixteenth in 1:46 2-5. As far as the customers were concerned the Brown Knight victory was a sharp form reversal. Brown Knight not only picked up weight today but was meeting Purple King, a horse that defeated him in his two previous outings. The crowd made Purple Knight the favorite and there was much "beefing" after the race.

Modest Queen set the pace for a half with Dizzy Dame and Purple King close up. The front two horses burned hay, and Jockey Maurice Peters, who rides alternately good and bad, rushed the favorite along with them. As the field left the backstretch, Syracuse came around on the outside to take command. Modest Queen finally tired and Teddy Patic moved up to challenge Syracuse. These two settled into a stretch duel when Brown Knight came "out of the clouds" to win in improved going-away fashion.

One of the meeting's smallest daily double pay-offs came when Betty's Bobby, an odds-on favorite, won the third race by six lengths while performing in the colors of Col. E. R. Bradley. Those who coupled this filly with Flying Jane, $8.50 winner of the first race, took down a $23.80 mutuel in the twin wager.

The favorite players also were successful in the day's steeplechase, but only after the judges had consulted a photo of the thrilling finish. Victory went to Gary Black's Little Marty, an odds-on choice, over Itsamaid, an old half-mile campaigner.

Earl Mower, good apprentice here, rode his way out of the apprentice ranks aboard Lady Orchid. He lost the apprentice allowance and by doing so lost mounts on two horses in the seventh and eighth races. S. P. Lemmick's War Emblem was sent to the front going to the clubhouse turn and led the remainder of the way in the eighth race. Scarlet O was second ahead of a photo for third money in which Versailles took the nod from Tutticurio. The winner, handled by Apprentice G. Wallace, paid $13.20.

G. W. High Vets Who Face Virginia Class A Leaders Saturday

G. W. High Unconcerned Over Maury

Beaten Twice, They're Still Confident; Play Norfolk ElevenSaturday

Beaten in two of their four starts already this season, and tied in another, George Washington High's undersized gridmen nevertheless look forward to Saturday's game with Maury High, of Norfolk, with little concern about the outcome.

Captain Jack Payne, the lone letterman in the Alexandrian's forward wall, expresses the sentiment of the team when he confides:

"We'll beat 'em. Everything is against us, but don't worry. Maury is out in front of the Class A Virginia Scholastic League. It's got one of the best teams in years. And to top that off, the last time we got together with Maury they sort of shellacked us. That don't mean a thing, though. We'll beat 'em."

They'll Fight Anyway

In the face of such confidence, it's a pretty safe bet the Presidents will put up a tough fight in the Saturday battle in Norfolk, whether they win or not.

Coach Al Doran has no such dazzling prospects. Payne at center, and two veteran backs, Ed Williams and Jim Taylor, aren't quite enough tempered material upon which to build championship hopes. Yet Doran thinks he's got one of the scrappiest teams in the section.

Doran Wants Victory

Diran, who coached G. W. Basketers to an invitation to the Washington and Lee University tournament last year, particularly wants to beat Central on October 27. Since the Mount Pleasanters have been treated to their fifirst defeat in two years, he thinks his task has been made easier.

In Captain Payne, incidentally, the Presidents have their second leader from the Payne family. Jack's brother, Howard, captained the 1938 G. W. eleven from the guard position.

Red Wings Sold Two

Detroit, Oct. 17 (AP).—The Detroit Red Wings Hockey Club announced tonight the outright sale of Doug Young, veteran defenseman, and Johnny Sherf, spedey young forward, to the Pittsburgh Hornets of the International-American League. Terms of the deal were not disclosed.

Star Hurler Recalls Fate Of Lombardi

BatteryMate, Honored Last Year, Was 'Goat' Of World Series as Yanks Crushed Reds

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 17.—Bucky Walters, Cincinnati's 27-game winner, learned today probably with mixed feelings, that he had been voted the National League's most valuable player for 1939 by the Baseball Writers Association.

While appreciating the well-earned distinction, the 29-year-old Red flinger doubtless will recall that the same honor was voted last year to his battery mate, Ernie Lombardi, and that Ernie hasn't been anything like the same player since.

Not only did Lombardi slump fearfully at the plate during the recent race, but he woun ! up the gilt-edged "goat" of that final hectic World Series game against the Yankees. Walters, incidentally, was pitching and losing his second game of the series at the time Ernie got the wind knocked out of him. An omen, maybe.

Walters was first choice of 13 of the 24 writers who participated in the annual poll, and the second choice of five others. He rolled up a total of 303 out of a possible 336 points.

Second to him was Johnny Mize, slugging first baseman of the St. Louis Cardinals and the league's leading hitter, who received 178 points, including one first-place nomination. Paul Derringer, who pitched 25 victories while losing 7 for Cincinnati, was third with 174 points. Two writers placed hm first.

Fourth went to still another Cincinnati star, First Baseman Frank McCormick, who led the circuit both in hits and runs batted in, with 159 points. Curt Davis, Cardinal pitcher, was the onl yother player to receive more than 100 votes. He had 106, and his teammate, Infielder Jimmy Brown, received 99. It was strictly a Cincinnati-St. Louis family affair.

Other points were: Joe Medwick, St. Louis, 81; Leo Durocher, Brooklyn, 52; Harry Danning, New York, 33; Luke Hamlin, Brooklyn, 32; Mel Ott, New oYrk, 21; William Jurges, New York, 20; Dolf Camilli, Brooklyn, 20; Billy Myers, Cincinnati, 18; Stan Hack, Chicago, 17; Augie Galan, Chicago, 11; Terry Moore, St. Louis, 15; Morris Arnovich, Philadelphia, 10; Linus Frey, Cincinnati; Bill Lee, Chicago, and Enos Slaughter, St. Louis, 8 each;

DERRINGER McCormick

Bill Werber, Cincinnati, 6; Max West, Boston, and Leo Hartnett, Chicago, 5; Ival Goodman, Cincinnati, Hwddy Hassett, Boston; Pete Coscarart, Brooklyn, and Elbie Fletcher, Boston - Pittsburgh, 4; Harry Lavagetti, Brooklyn, 3; Bob Bowman, St. Louis, 2; Eddie Miller, Boston, and Bill Herman, Chicago, 1.

Walters receives a trophy awarded annually by the Sporting News. Announcement of the American League's most valuable will be made next week.

Doerer to Open Turkey Tourney

Entries are being accepted now, with a 50-cent fee.

The first round of match play must be completed by October 29, the second by November 5, the semifinals by November 12 and the final round by November 19.

The winner and runner-up in each flight will receive turkeys.

Grid 'Experts' Are Whistling In the Dark

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 17.—The Atlantic and the Pacific, if you take the word of the football experts as well as the songwriters, aren't what they're cracked up to be in this year's early gridiron campaigning.

In fact, the 112 experts who balloted in the season's first Associated Press poll of outstanding teams in the country, although tabbing Pittsburgh's "pathetic" Panthers as No. 1 on the list, otherwise went predominantly for the South, the Midwest and the Southwest.

Only Southern California's oncetied, twice victorious Trojans from the Pacific Coast and Pitt's supposedly deflated forces broke through the landslide for Dixie and the wide open spaces. The Trojans, although receiving not a single vote for first place, picked up enough points in nominations for second to tenth spots to hold seventh in the total point-scoring, with 442 1-7 points.

Panthers Top List

Pitt, receiving 25 of the 112 first-place votes, compiled a total of 793 points on a basis of 10 for a first-place ballot, 9 for a second, 8 for a third, etc. Ninety-nine points back, with 16 first-place selections to their credit, came the Irish of Notre Dame, who have squeaked through with three victories.

Oklahoma's upsetting Sooners, once-tied but winner over Northwestern and Texas, came in third, with 10 first-place nominations and 607 points. The South then was heard from with Tulane holding fourth with 560 points and Tennessee, tabbed as the pre-season standout by many, fifth with 556. Tennessee, incidentally, drew more first-place picks than any other outfit—28½, one and a half more than Pittsburgh. The half represents a first-place split with Alabama on one ballot.

Michigan Is Sixth

Michigan, Big Ten hope, was sixth with 512; Alabama came in eighth with 402 9-14 (the fraction represents "split tickets"); Texas A. and M., Southwestern leader, was ninth with 383 1-7, and Ohio State, co-favorite with Michigan in the

Grid Dodgers Bolster Team, Buy Two Stars

New York, Oct. 17.—The Brooklyn Dodgers of the National Football League today announced the purchase of two more players to bolster the team for the final half of the season.

Alec Shellogg, 210-pound tackle from Notre Dame, was purchased from the Chicago Bears, and Dick Nardi, former Ohio State back with the Detroit Lions last year, was signed after proving himself in an exhibition game with Portsmouth last Sunday.

Yesterday the Dodgers obtained Sam Francis, former Nebraska back, and Johnny Tosi, big center once of Niagara, from Pittsburgh.

Packers Sign Former Dodger

Green Bay, Wis., Oct. 17 (AP).—The Green Bay Packers, of the National Football League, today signed Gus Zarnas, former Ohio State guard, who recently was released by the Brooklyn Dodgers. Zarnas played with Chicago Bears for two seasons.

Here's One Robber Who Got Stung; He Can't Use 'Em

One thief who won't be able to wear his spoils on his back is at large in Washington this morning.

He broke into Central High's football dressing room over the week-end and carried away nine pairs of shoulder pads, eight pairs of hip pads and an undisclosed number of spiked shoes.

Assistant Principal John Brougher reported the loss to Metropolitan Police ysterday. The room, he said, was ransacked, though no other equipment was taken.

Teams may contact the Northerns at Shepherd 6460 or Adams 3272.

'Bama, Vols to Battle Before 36,000 Fans

By the Associated Press

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 17.—Any natives who don't care for football in the raw might as well evacuate Knoxville come Saturday, for there's a gridiron spree in the maving, such as Dixie hasn't seen in years.

It's innocently labeled Tennessee versus Alabama, but it packs a wallop that will jam 36,000 farsighted ticket holders into Shields-Watkins Field, and from Friday eve until sun-up Sunday, Gay street will be not only gay but riotus.

They can put up the detour signs for unwary travelers who expect peace, quiet and repose. Innkeepers already have reserved their beds down to the last cot and appeals have gone out for private homes to take the overflow.

Tennessee has warmed up with easy victories over North Carolina State, Sewanee and Chattanooga. Alabama coasted against Howard, won a tough 7-6 verdict over Fordham and ambled through Mercer.

The fever heat springs partly from the fact this is an old feud and partly from a belief that if any team can stop Tennessee's march to another Southeastern Conference title and a choice bowl bid, that team is Alabama.

A calm as deceptive as Indian summer prevailed today, but it will be smashed when Coach Frank Thomas brings his Crimson Tide into town bent on avenging last year's 13-0 defeat at the hands of Maj. Bob Neyland's Tennessee Volunteers.

A battle for individual honors was expected between Tennessee's ace, George (Bad News) Cafego, and Alabama's young hurricane, Jimmy Nelson.

"Tennessee has a great team," Thomas said. "They beat us last year with virtually the same lineup, but we're hoping to make is battle."

To which Maj. Bob replied:

"It's going to be a tough ball game. Alabama looks like a great team."

With three regulars injured (Guard Cullen Sugg, Quarterback Bud Waites and Fullback John Hanson), Thomas ordered secret practice, hoping the injured men would be back in shape by Saturday.

Barring injuries this week, Tennessee will be at peak strength for the Tide.

Redskins Report Sammy Baugh Will Be Out of Pirate Game

Star Passer's Spot Filled By Filchock

Todd and German, 2 'Rookies' Also Add To Team's Attack; Drake Tops Scorers

For the third consecutive week the Washington Redskins will operate without the services of Sammy Baugh it was revealed yesterday when Redskin officials announced that the injured Baugh will not be available for Sunday's game at Pittsburgh.

Baugh is still limping on the wrenched knee received in the game against the Giants, but the absence of the Redskins' forward-passing ace is no longer the calamitous event that it might have been deemed a month ago. The Redskins have done very well without Baugh in their last two games.

In fact they have averaged 42 points a game and have turned up in Frankie Filchock a passer who has been able to complete 12 out of the 13 heaves he has attempted. And the sensational running of Dick Todd and Jimmy German have lent new emphasis to the Redskins' ground attack, once overshadowed by Baugh's passing.

Official National League figures, announced yesterday, reveal that John Drake, of the Cleveland Rams, is the new scoring leader in league play, according to the Associated Press. The touchdown Drake scored against Detroit last week raised his point total to 36 and ousted Bill Smith, Cardinal end, from the lead. Smith has scored 34 points.

Three of the league's ends—Smith, Perry Schwartz, of Brooklyn, and Vic Spadaccini, of Cleveland—are tied in pass receiving with 15 each, according to the league figures. No Redskin player ranks among the first five pass receivers.

Joe Maniaci, Chicago Bears' veteran and Bill Osmanski, their rookie star, are one-two among the leading ground-gainers of the league. Maniaci has gained 379 yards in 48 attempts and also tops the league players in average yards gained with a figure of 7.8. Osmanski has averaged 6.2 yards per try in amassing a 332 total.

Andy Farkas is fifth among the league's ground-gainers with 206 yards to his credit. Parker Hall, sensational Cleveland rookie from Mississippi, leads the league in passing efficiency with a .500 average, compiled from 47 successful throws in 94 attempts.

Two of D. C.'s Greatest Ends Clash in Card-Colonial Game

Debate on Ability of Shine and Nowaskey Rages as Battle Nears; It's Good Little Man vs. Good Big Man

By Jack Munhall.

Just as good men are essential to the success of a minstrel show, so are they indispensable to a coach who demands a winning football team.

It may be mere coincidence, and moke likely it may be that modern football demands better ends because of the incraesde use of forfward passes and the attendant shelving of the seven-man line for the six, but the District undeniably has its finest group of collegiate wingmen in history.

All of which brings us to the subject of today's sports quiz: Can a good little end beat a good big end?

A debate of this question is at present raging in the city with supporters of Catholic University's Louis Shine arguing for their little fellow with those who swear by big and burly Robert Nowaskey, of George Washington.

No longer ago than last year any C. U. fan, even the most rabid tub beater who would have compared Shine to Nowaskey would straightaway have been committed to one of those institutions where self-styled Napoleons and Abe Lincolns are dime-a-dozen. But this year things are different. Nowaskey is all the end he was last season when he received All-America mention although obscured with a medicore eleven. However, Shine, who was just another good player in 1938, is much more than that now. There are many who call him the greatest end that ever wore C. U.'s colors. A big reason for his great improvement is the coaching of Wayne Millner.

Consensus of Coaches

Be that as it is, the question of Shine being as good or better than Nowaskey is an issue that probably never will be settled to the satisfaction of all concerned. The pair can be compared, however, but they should be compared with a qualification of size. Nowaskey stands better than 6 feet and weight a tough 195 pounds, whereas Shine, to football, is a little guy—height, 5 feet 10 inches, weight, 175.

A consensus of coaches and players still maintains that there is no end here, Shine included, who can touch Nowaskey for all-around value to his team. However, there are several respected football men, including Dutch Bergman and Wayne Millner, whose opinion should not be discounted even though they are Catholic University coaches, who believe Shine is every bit as gaad as Nowaskey, pound per pound.

This in all probability is the first time that football players have been compared in this manner. But in this case it doesn't seem a bad idea. Nowaskey is fast and aggressive, a good blocker and defensive player and also a fine pass receiver and an elusive and powerful runner after he catches a pass. That same thumbnail sketch could be applied to Shine, except that he is not as hard a runner to stop and he isn't quite as much a "killer" in spirit.

Nowaskey Has Edge

There it appears are the departments of the game in which Nowaskey has a slight edge on Shine and in each instance Nowaskey's more rugged physique may be the explanation. It is much harder to stop a 195-pound ball carrier than one who weighs only 175, all other things being equal. Likewise, it is much less detrimental to a big football player's health to be aggressive than for a little fellow like Shine.

Furthermore, in comparing this pair it must be taken into consideration the differences in their assignments because of the differences in the systems of offense used by their respective teams. C. U. employs a slightly modified Notre Dame, while G. W.'s is similar to the Warner. Therefore, on offense, Shine always handles the opposing tackle alone, while Nowaskey usually has the help of a blocking back.

And so it is when you get down to facts and consider all angles, you go in circles. Summing up, we'd say that Nowaskey must concede a slight edge in blocking to Shine, but more than makes up for that in ball carrying and aggressiveness.

Among the other especially fine ends playing for local colleges are Bob Kercher and Reds Daly and Mike Kopcik, of Georgetown; Dick Shaffer and Francis Beamer, of Maryland, and Frank August, of George Washington. Kopcik is the only sophomore in the group and for that reason should develop into a much better player than any of the others.

Army Chief Attends V.M.I. Game Saturday

Gen. Marshall Honor Guest for Homecoming Contest With Virginia

Special Dispatch to The Post

Lexington, Va., Oct. 17.—Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff of the United States Army, heads the list of honor guests at V. M. I.'s homecoming game Saturday with Virginia. Gen. Marshall will be escorted on the V. M. I. post by the cadet cavalry troop and will be greeted by a 17-gun salute fired by the cadet battery.

At 11:30 a. m., immediately following Gen. Marshall's arrival, the cadet regiment will hold a garrison review in his honor. Seven hundred cadets and 160 cavalry and artillery horses will participate in the spectacular parade of mounted and dismounted units.

Gen. Marshall, a member of the V. M. I. class of 1901, was the regular left tackle on the 1900 team, which played a scoreless tie with Virginia and won the State championship. Saturday's game, with both teams undefeated in the Old Dominion, will also have an important bearing on the State "Big Six" championship races.

Classes Suspended

The cadet corps will form again at 2:05 p. m., to march in review on Alumni Field before Gen. Marshall, Dr. John Lloyd Newomb, president of the niversity of Virginia, and Maj. Gen. Charles E. Kilbourne, superintendent of V. M. I.

Academic duties for the UCadet Corps will be suspended at 10:30 a. m. A dance in W. H. Cocke ('94) Hall given by the first (senior) class will start at 9 p. m. Music will be furnished by the V. M. I. Commanders, cadet orchestra.

Homecoming activities will start at 4:30 p. m. Friday when V. M. I.'s varsity and Freshman cross-country runners meet Virginia Tech's harriers over the V. M. I. course. Jimmie Dale heads the cadet varsity, which is largely composed of sophomores, members of last year's "Big Six" freshman championship team.

Coach Allison "Pooley" Hubert, pleased with V. M. I.'s uphill victory over the favored Vanderbilt team last week, expects his Cadets to be at full strength for the crucial battle with the Cavaliers, who earned an upset 12-12 draw last season. Capt. Paul Shu, all-Southern Conference halfback, and other cadet early-season casualties are fit and ready for fulltime service.

Richmond Owner Seeks Player Deal

Richmond, Oct. 17 (AP).—Owner Eddie Mooers, of the Richmond Colts, plans to sound out the Cordinal organization on a possible player swap involving Pitcher Harry Shuman, of the Colts, and Shortstop Bill Hart and Pitcher Moose Fralick, of the Piedmont championship Asheville tourists.

"I consider Shuman a fine prospect for major league baseball," Mooers said, "and I wouldn't think of trading him on even terms to the Cardinals, who are interested in him, for Shortstop Hart, but I would trade him for Hart and Fralick. I'm going to talk with the Cardinal representative ath me meeting Wednesday about a trade."

A special meeting of the Piedmont League directors will be held here tomorrow.

Randolph-Macon Game Saturday Is Maroons' Homecoming Battle

Special Dispatch to The Post

Salem, Va., Oct. 17.—Two rugged scrimmages tomorrow and Thursday were expected by Coach Gordon (Pop) White today to put the Roanoke College Maroons in shape for their annual homecoming battle with Randolph-Macon's Yellow Jackets on College Field here Saturday afternoon.

While the Jackets were winning their second game last week-end over American University, 18-0, the Maroons were idle, still wondering when they could muster enough scoring punch to win their first game.

"I don't see how you can figure us anything but the underdog against Randolph-Macon," Coach White said today. "We haven't made but two touchdowns all season, and (Coach) Frank Summers' boys have gotten six in their two wins."

Working under a non-scouting agreement, the two teams know little of what to expect from each other, but both the Maroons and the Jackets have definite ends in view for Saturday's game.

Roanoke, in addition to attempting to extend its winning streak to four games over the Jackets since 1931 and to ring up its thirteenth triumph in 14 games since the Randolph-Macon series started back in 1923, will want to slap the Jackets as a part of the festive homecoming celebration, when several hundred alumni are expected to return to the campus.

The Swede spent extra time working with Werner, who starred as a plebe. Werner has had the bad fault of starting slowly. He is a dangerous runner, once under way, and the Swede said he would see "plenty of service" against Notre Dame if his getaway continues to improve.

G. W. Shifts Fedora to Halfback to Bolster Team's Attack

Coach Reinhart Feels Change Will Boost Colonials' Offense for Citadel Game Here

Walt Fedora, the husky young sophomore back who Coach Bill Reinhart believes has great prospects, yesterday was shifted from fullback to left halfback with the hope of supplying the goal-line punch the George Washington University eleven lacked last week against Butler. Long regarded as a strong runner who might become a standout ball carrier Fedora's play at fullback in the first two G. W. games was of high order.

However, Reinhart feels the fullback position is in good hands at present. Lud Urick and Fred Sartore, letter winners in this job last year, and Walter Welc, a sophomore, all have shown to advantage and the Buff coach believes they can handle the post acceptably.

Thus Fedora can be spared for his new tasks and he probably will get his first crack at this important position against The Citadel here Friday night. If the shift strengthens George Washington's attack, particularly its pay-dirt power, Fedora should be well established for the Georgetown game next week.

The Colonials marched all over the field against Butler, making 16 first downs and totaling more than 300 yards gain by land and air, yet they scored only one touchdown. Fedora's power as an inside runner, coupled with his speed and drive, is calculated to supply the need punch once the Colonials get inside the enemy's 25-yard line.

Fedora's presence in the tailback spot is an indication that three other aspirants to this berth will get even more competition. Billy Richardson, Eddie Wilamoski and Ken Batson have alternated here thus far, with honors about even. Wilamoski turned in the best performance against Butler, with Batson and Richardson about even.

And so the fight for Vic Sampson's position, which has been keen since G. W. opened training, continues at a merry pace. And Reinhart says little and chuckles. The more competition he gets for this position the more action he'll get in the thick of the fight of a tough game.

Georgetown's Prep in Debut With Wilson

Coach Keating, Former Hoya Star, Launches His Coaching Career

Tommy Keating, former Georgetown U. football star, launches his schoolboy coaching career today at Garrett Park when his Little Hoyas of Georgetown Prep square off with Woodrow Wilson High at 3:30 p. m. And before the week is out, Keating will send his club into its second game of a six-game schedule, a clash with Charlotte Hall M. A. Saturday, also on the home field.

From early indications, Keating's first year of coaching should be a reasonably successful one. He has plenty of experienced material, though his players aren't as heavy as he might hope. Prep, no longer in the Catholic Prep Conference that included St. John's and Gonzaga, engages lighter prep school teams against which its light line and backfield have a much better chance.

Bud Eckrich and "Sport" Barrett will do heavy duty in Prep's starting backfield, while George Bentley and Ben Decker are the fastest ballcarriers on the squad. This quartet will be augmented by Burly Boylan and Marty Kuntz, Murray McDonnell, Vince Duncan and Frank Gannon.

The starting line will probably include Capt. Chuck Devine and Bud Cremen or Bob Barrett, ends; Roger Goodspeed and Bud Smith, the latter a converted halfback, tackles; Joe Crowley and Joe De Courcey, guards, and either Paul Stewart or Lou Salb at center. Numerous talented reserves will be on hand to fill each position.

Berger Selected Referee for Hader Match With Evans

To avoid offending the finer sensibilities of the wrestling gentlemen who haunt his groan emporium, Promoter Joe Turner yesterday announced Referee Casey Berger, instead of Benny Bortnick, will officiate at the "grudge" return match between Don Evans and Jack Hader tomorrow night in the W street arena.

Bortnick, who holds the undisputed record for having a decision hissed (eight minutes), was to referee the match, but Evans complained that Benny discriminated against him when he disqualified him in his last week's match with Hader.

"I have no other alternative but to assign Berger to the job," Turner said after due deliberation.

Tomorrow night's card brings out The Golden Terror and "Bad Boy" Brown in a co-fetaure, while supporting roles will be filled by Emil Dusek against White Gorvo, Gino Garibaldi against Abie Coleman, and Johnny Katan against Bibber McCoy.

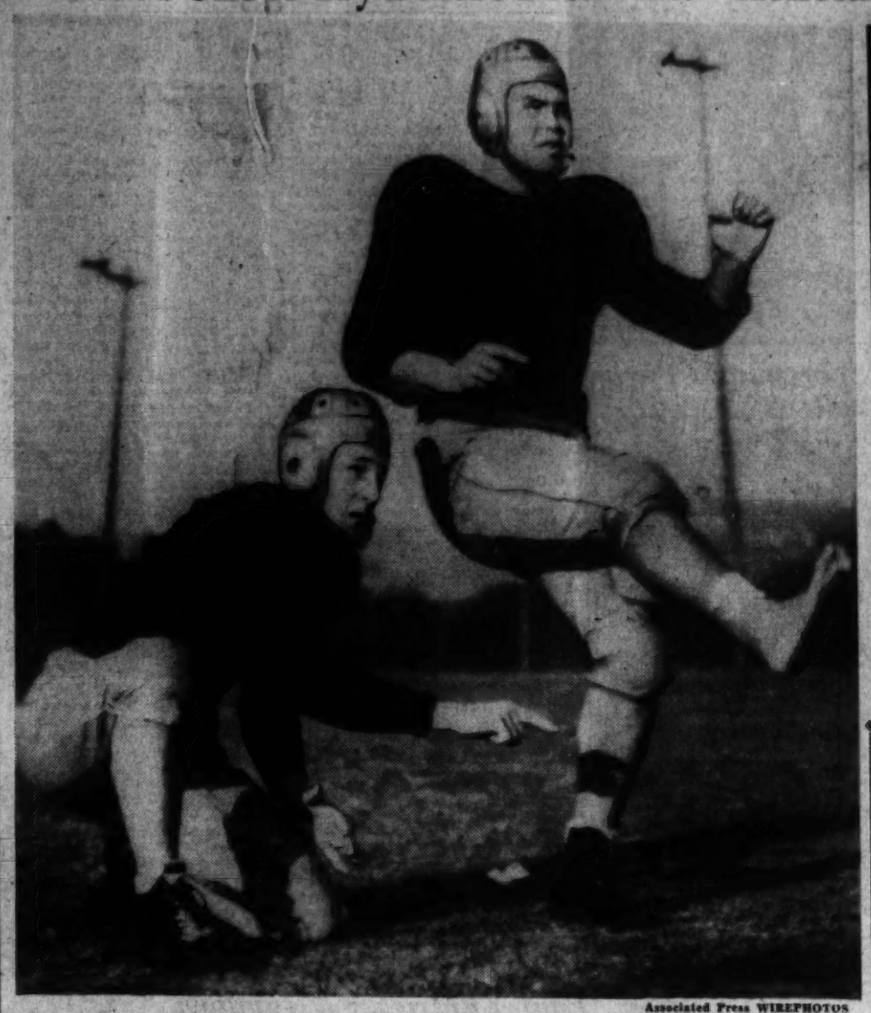
Here's One to Try Before Breakfast—Honolulu Huskie Kicks Barefooted



Associated Press WIREPHOTOS

Fairfax Hall Girls Get Set for Sweet Brair

By International News Service

Waynesboro, Va., Oct. 17.—Fairfax Hall hockey team resumed practice this afternoon preparatory to the team's second intercollegiate match of the season against Sweet Briar College freshmen here Saturday afternoon. Last week-end Fairfax defeated Madison College's new girl team, 1 to 0, with Marjorie Hicks scoring the lone goal.

Hoyas Shift Line-up in Effort To Tighten Defense for Bisons

Mindful of the unbeaten record Bucknell University spoiled for Georgetown back in 1925 when he captained the Hoya eleven, Coach Jack Hagerty yesterday announced two changes expected to give his starting lineup added strength for the game with the Bisons at Lewisburg, Pa., Saturday.

Jim Reichey replaces Allen Matuza as a starting center, and Joe Daniels will be in instead of Bill Nealon at right tackle.

While Daniels, just recovered from an attack of the grippe, will be resuming his post as key man in the Hoya forward wall, Reichey, a junior, now in a duel with Matuza for the starting position, will be getting the nod because of his outstanding play in the Syracuse 13-13 tie game last week.

Bucknell Pepped Up

Full of pep after its 15-0 victory over Albright last Saturday, Bucknell will be an inspired eleven, as the Hoya invasion marks its homecoming game. The Bisons have not lost before the alumni since 1929, and a crowd of 8,000 is expected in Lewisburg to see Georgetown in action there for the first time.

Georgetown's unbeaten record—that way since 1937—will furnish added incentive for the Bisons. Fourteen years ago, after Lou Little had coached Georgetown halfway through an unbeaten, untied season Bucknell came to Washington, and in the mud of Griffith Stadium downed the Hilltop lads, 3 to 2. Hagerty led that 1925 team as captain and he hasn't forgotten it, for it was their only loss of the season.

Razzle-dazzle will be the order of things in the Bison attack, according to yesterday's reports from Lewisburg. Bucknell will be minus one man, Melvin Knupp, sophomore quarterback. To match Georgetown's galloping Lou Ghecas, the Bisons will throw into the fray Frank (King) Funair, who averaged 6.7 yards per try, and Frank Serrao, fullback, who picked up 5.6 yards per run last wee against the Lions.

Laverne Dueger, junior quarterback, will replace Knupp.

Terps to Use Krouse in Rutgers Clash

Showing of Former Western Star in Line Lifts Hopes Saturday

Encouraged by the play of Bill Krouse at tackle in the rugged stand the Maryland University squad made against Virginia's powerful forward wall Saturday, Coach Frank Dobson will start the 233-pound former Western High School star Saturday when the Terps play Rutgers at New Brunswick, N. J.

"Big Bill," so-called because he is Maryland's heaviest player, was conscripted for the left tackle post to replace the injured Bob Brown, who probably will see little action the remainder of the year.

This blow to the Terps has been lessened by Krouse's showing, and with the remainder of the squad in shape Maryland will be favored to take Rutgers in stride. Rutgers was tied, 6-6, last week by Richmond, while Maryland lost 12-7 to Virginia, only narrowly missing upsetting the dope and winning.

Two New Jersey boys will be in the Terps line-up—Joe Murphy, 152-pound quarterback and Southern Conference sprint champion, from Carneys Point, and Bob Smith, regular center from Woodlyne, when they tackle the Scarlet for the fourth time.

The passing arm of Mearle DuVall, sophomore back, probably will be a thorn in Rutger's side, for reports from New Brunswick yesterday were that Coach Harvey Harman's boys are none too good on their aerial defense. DuVall's performance against Virginia branded him as one of the potential great passers of the game.

Maryland will settle down to study of Rutgers plays, as scouted by Roy Mackert, physical education director, today while Terp formations undergo an equally searching scrutiny in New Brunswick. The two elevens last met in 1925, and Maryland has won two of the three games.

Duke Soccer Team Heads for Navy And First Game

Durham, N. C., Oct. 17.—Duke's 1939 soccer team left here today for Annapolis where they Blue Devils will open their season against the Navy tomorrow afternoon.

The trip is the longest ever taken by the soccer team, since the sport was recognized at Duke. It will also mark the Blue Devil booters first intersectional battle. The fray with the Middies, long a recognized power in Eastern soccer circles, is the toughest that Duke has on this year's schadule. While the Blue Devils will be the definite underdogs, the experience of playing against a team in a section where soccer is a major sport should prove valuable to them.

U. C. L. A. to See Same Old Things On 7 Grid Trips

Los Angeles, Oct. 17.—University of California at Los Angeles gridders are apt to find the scenery monotonous for the rest of the season. While other teams are riding around the country, the Bruins will travel from their suburban Westwood cmapus to the Coloseum downtown for seven successive games. They ended their sightseeing last Saturday in a jaunt to Palo Alto to play Stanford.

Terrors Are Booking

Georgetown Terror grid team has several open dates on its schedule and is anxious to book games. It particularly wants a foe for Sunday. Ralph Crampton, manager, can be reached at Emerson 7743 after 5 p. m.

Aluminio, South American Horse, Wins 'Cap at Jamaica

Strong Drive Down Stretch Nets Victory

Gallant Challenge by Rhiniz Is Staved Off By Winner; No Sir Takes Show Money

By the Associated Press

Jamaica, N. Y., Oct. 17.—Aluminio, one of the numerous South American horses to win on New York tracks this season, carried C. C. Walsey's silks to a one-length victory in the Sennings Park Class D Handicap, mile and a furlong feature of the card here this afternoon. The Argentine colt, one of the outsiders in the nine-horse field at odds of 6 to 1, staved off a remarkable rally by W. B. Simpson's slow-starting Rhiniz while finishing in 1:53 .-5.

Joseph Pepp's oN Sir, the 8-to-5 favorite, was beaten a half length for the place. Bobby Dotter, who recently won astride No Sir, was on Aluminio in today's event.

Dini, with Don Meade up, was the only winning choice in the first five events. Johnny Longden, who has been running in hard luck ever since he drew a ten-day suspension at Belmont Park, had two spills today, but managed to escape with a shaking up. Both mishaps occurred at the starting point. Hieronymus wheeled and tossed Longden in the opener, while Highscope, Johnny's mount in the fourth race, broke loose before the start and upset the little British veteran.

Riccadona set the pace in the Sennings Park until collared by Early Settler near the end of 6 furlongs. When the field turned for home, Aluminio, a forward factor from the start, assumed command. No Sir and Rhiniz, both slow to get started, made their huns, but the South American stood his ground as Rhiniz had the better of the place duel with the favorite.

LITTLE MARTY pulled up sore. ITSAMAID moved to front when SINGING BROOK fell, withstood challenge of FLYING FEATHERS, saved ground while running with LITTLE MARTY in final quarter and came again under whip at end. PORTUNUS, not hurried in early stages while saving ground, improved position on inside, wore down CHAINWICK to get to front and was kept to punishment to end. HIGH TENSION, slow to begin, worked way to contention on outside and closed full of run. CHAINWICK set good pace while saving ground and held on with good courage. EBLIS raced forwardly from start and weakened in closing quarter.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WAR EMBLEM, $13.20, $7.60, $5.20; SCARLET O, $4.20, $3.20; VERSAILLES, $4.10.

WAR EMBLEM, hustled along on outside to get to front early, saved ground while setting good pace and held sway to end under drive. SCARLET O worked way to contention with good energy, but hung in final eighth. VERSAILLES lacked early speed and trailed for half, went wide for racing room when placed to drive and closed with bold rush. TUTTICURIO was keen forward factor to stretch and weakened gradually.

Foreclosures Decline 10% Below 1938

Non-Farm Figures Reported by Home Loan Bank Board

By Thomas M. Cahill.

A 10 per cent decrease in foreclosures on other than farm properties during the first eight months of this year from the same period of 1938 is announced by officials of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The Board's Division of Research and Statistics makes a monthly survey of foreclosures on non-farm property by all types of mortgage lenders in the United States.

Foreclosures in August were 3.5 per cent under July—a somewhat greater decline than the average for that period during the five years from 1934 to 1939 and 9.2 per cent less than in August, 1938. The estimated number of foreclosures this year was 8,695 in August and 74,680 for the eight months. As against an average index of 100 in 1934, the August index was 45.1.

Fewer foreclosures were reported for all but three of the 12 Federal Home Loan Bank districts for the eight-month period, with the Topeka and Cincinnati areas showing the most favorable change, declines of 25.9 and 25.8 per cent respectively. Increases in the Boston, Chicago and Little Rock districts averaged 14 per cent, while the situation was unchanged in the Des Moines district.

Decreases from July occured in seven districts and from August, 1938, in eight. In the first instance, the Cincinnati district led with a 22.2 per cent drop followed by the Chicago district with 12.2 per cent. In the second instance, there was a 29.3 per cent recession in the New York area, which includes New Jersey, and 17.2 per cent falling off in the Los Angeles district.

Home Building Active

The first month of the war brought no indication of curtailment in residential building throughout the Middle Atlantic States. The latest summary prepared by J. T. Little, district manager of Dodge Reports, revealed that the September contracts for residential work and materials moved to the fourth highest level of the year and continued the strong 1939 advance over the preceding five years.

All residential building contracted for throughout eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, the District of Columbia and Virginia, during September, had a work-and-materials valuation of $16,968,000. The months of March, with $19,442,000; May, $19,354,000, and August, $17,689,000, have passed that point so far in 1939. The lowest valuation recorded for any month of the year was $11,240,000 in July. The record for residential building in the Middle Atlantic States has risen this year with a nine-months' total of $141,783,000.

Rapid Growth

To emphasize the favorable position of residential building, Mr. Little compares the present total with the corresponding nine-months' totals of the preceding five years. At the depression low-point, 1934, the contract valuation was $29,529,000. In the following year the nine-months' total jumped to $53,589,000. An even larger gain was recorded in 1936, with a September 30 total of $88,305,000. In the next year another substantial gain was established with a contract total of $114,703,000. The upward trend halted, momentarily, in 1938 with a total of $93,591,000 at the end of the third quarter.

The unquestionable superiority of the residential building industry's position in the Middle Atlantic States this year is well illustrated by the contract valuation of $141,783,000, established during the first nine months, Dodge Reports concludes.

Factory Building Contracts Nearly Twice Year Ago

New York, Oct. 17 (AP).—A rise in factory and commercial building was reported today by the F. W. Dodge Corporation, compiler of construction data.

Factory building contracts in September were nearly double the figure for the same month last year, the report said, and total commercial and industrial building increased to $179,011,000 from $153,869,000 in August.

This more than offset a decline in public works, it was noted. Gross construction contracts in 37 States were put at $323,227,000, a gain of 3 per cent, compared with August, and 7 per cent over the 1938 month's total.

For the first nine months total contracts were $2,634,802,000, the highest for any comparable period since 1930, and 23 per cent greater than in the like 1938 months.

Treasury Sells $3,000,000 Gold to Brazil for Trade

By the Associated Press

The Treasury, it was learned yesterday, has sold $3,000,000 worth of gold to Brazil in a step designed to use the Government's vast gold holdings to promote trade with Latin America.

Brazil, it was understood, will leave the gold on deposit in the New York Federal Reserve Bank and use it for collateral for temporary borrowings of dollar exchange on a revolving fund basis with the Treasury's stabilization fund.

Last week, President Roosevelt told reporters negotiations were near completion with two or three Latin-American countries on the use of Treasury gold to improve trade.

In the case of Brazil, which may serve as a precedent for similar procedure with other Latin-American countries the gold will enable Brazil to provide businessmen with dollars to pay for United States merchandise in seasons when Brazil has a dollar shortage.

Brazil paid in milreis currency for the gold, but promised to make good the value of the Brazilian money if it should depreciate in financial markets.

Moulton Urges Resistance to Price Advances

All Ultimately Lose By War, Says Sloan, General Motors Head

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 17.—Harold G. Moulton, president of Brookings Institution and a member of the War Resources Board, today urged several hundred industrialists to continue to "resist to the utmost" advances in prices. He said:

"The economic goal of the United States at this difficult and uncertain period should be to make full utilization of our productive resources in expanding production without permitting a general inflation of prices and destruction of equilibrium."

Introducing Moulton at a luncheon, Alfred P. Sloan, jr., chairman of General Motors Corporation, said that in war "all ultimately lose—a lower standard of living necessarily results, and years of necessary readjustment, as well. How anyone can believe that such a situation (war) can be a profitable enterprise is beyond my comprehension."

Asserting that the economic situation in the United States "appears—at least on the surface of things—to be highly promising," Moulton referred to recent improvement in corporate earnings, expanded production, increased employment and price rises in raw materials.

Pace Too Rapid

"But sober reflection," he continued, "warns of lurking dangers. Are we not stocking up with inventories and expanding production schedules at too rapid a pace? What if the war should end suddenly? Even if it proves to be of long duration, what will be the ultimate repercussions upon this country? Are we not even now riding the wind and promoting a business boom with the familiar distortion of prices, wages and other cost factors? Are we not sure to see, sooner or later, and perhaps sooner rather than later, a new collapse and another protracted period of painful readjustment?"

Sloan told the industrialists the broadened demand that arises out of war produces a stimulation soon reflected throughout the whole world economy.

"But the question," he added, "is not to discuss these particular circumstances, but rather to focus our attention on the fact that they lead inevitably to an accounting. Therefore the problem arises: How may those in industry best conduct themselves so as to so control the degree of dislocation and hold it to the minimum that is practically possible."

Canada Enters War Favorably Situated

Toronto, Oct. 17.—Canada has entered the present war under conditions much more favorable than those which prevailed in 1914 as a result of tremendous economic development, industrial expansion, increased mineral production and strengthened banking and monetary system over the past quarter century, Wood, Gundy & Co., say today.

Canada's export trade during the period has expanded by $515,000,000, or 113 per cent, while mineral production has shown an increase of $316,000,000, or 245 per cent, the study shows. Estimated United States' capital invested in Canada has increased over $3,000,000,000, or 335 per cent.

Tulsa, Oct. 17 (AP).—Crude oil production in the United States increased 259,510 barrels daily to 3,685,349 for the week ended October 14, the Oil and Gas Journal said today.

Illinois production was down 12,615 to 320,100 and Michigan was off 4,891 to 63,091. The flow of Oklahoma wells increased 22,925 to 425,350; East Texas, 98,258 to 492,848, with all Texas up 201,210 to 1,457,093; Louisiana, 11,106 to 264,180; California, 16,750 to 627,750; Kansas, 20,050 to 164,125; Eastern fields, 1,750 to 101,000, and the Rocky Mountain area, 1,820 to 83,990.

Butter and Eggs Hit New Highs

Chicago, Oct. 17 (AP).—Wholesale butter prices continued to forge upward today, gaining new high ground for the year on advances ranging to ¾ cent a pound. Butter scoring 92 was quoted at 29¼ cents, up ¼ from yesterday and at the best level in a year.

War Stocks Head Spirited Advance Steel Shares Also in Strong Demand U. S. Treasury Bonds Continue Gains

New York, Oct. 17.—Germany's swift thrusts against Britain and France on land, by sea and in the air today apparently convinced traders that war on a large scale is developing. Markets shook off the hesitancy and lethargy which has held them almost stationary for several weeks. Security and commodity prices advanced on a broad front and volume expanded sharply.

Shares gained 1 to 5 points in active dealings with "war babies," particularly the aircrafts, leading the upswing, many at new highs for the year or longer. Bonds rose in all sections. Treasurys going up with both the gilt-edged and speculative domestic corporates, while British and Canadian liens were well bought and improved accordingly. In the early stages of the war market, U. S. Governments usually declined in periods of speculative buying in securities.

Grains moved ahead on both war and trade buying, wheat being 1⅞ to 2⅛ cents higher in Chicago with last prices around the best levels of the day. Corn, oats and rye displayed similar strength. Cotton ended 40 to 70 cents a bale higher.

In foreign exchange sections, sterling and francs moved narrowly, the former improving a trifle and the latter easing a fraction, Finnish and Hungarian units were at new lows. Hungary announced a further 2-cent devaluation in the pengo.

Aircrafts Strong

Aircraft manufacturing issues came into the spotlight soon after the opening, trader attention being focused on the group though announcements of further orders for planes and by prominence in the news of Nazi air raids on British naval bases. Douglas climbed to 83¼, a new high, and closed at that point for a net gain of 5¾. North American aviation was up 2⅜ on 57,100 shares, the second most active stock of the day.

The low-priced Curtiss-Wright led the list with transactions of 57,500 shares for a half-point gain. United Aircraft, up 2⅝ and G. T. Martin, 1⅛ higher, were other air stocks in the most active division.

The day's leaders contained, in addition to airplane issues a generous lot of strictly "war babies," including Electric Boat, which added more than a point. The steels were second only to airplanes in the breadth and extent of gains. Steel common rose 3⅜ to close just under 79 while Bethlehem was ahead more than 4 at a last price of 93⅝.

Motor issues finally responded to bullish news. General Motors remained in the active division with better than a point gain and Chrysler, although less active, improved nearly 3. The average gain for ten leading motor shares was approximately 1½ points for the session.

Anaconda in Demand

Pickup in domestic sales of copper and a continuation of the steady export demand for the metal brought some buying into copper shares with Anaconda a strong and active leader, up nearly 2 points. Kennecott and Phelps Dodge rose in like fashion.

In the rail section, Grade A issues were particularly buoyant, with 20 leaders showing an average rise of nearly 1½ points. Atchison went ahead 2, Union Pacific 2¾, New York Central 1¾, and Pennsylvania and Illinois Central more than a point each.

Oils and utilities, while up on the day, were inclined to lag behind the general market. Analysts estimate the petroleum industry will be among the first to benefit from war influences, but the monopoly hearing at Washington has made some traders wary for the time at least. Standard Oil of New Jersey and Texas Corporation were exceptions on the up side, the former ending nearly 2 points up and the latter adding 1½.

Gains of 2 to 3 points were recorded by Westinghouse, U. S. Rubber, Sears Roebuck, Delaware & Hudson, American Smelting, American Can and Allied Chemical. Du Pont was up 4.

Volume on the big board of 1,842,050 shares was the largest since September 27. First hour volume of 470,000 shares was nearly as large as total transactions of 490,000 shares on the previous day. The 100-stock average was up 1.38 points, 1.51 points for the 70 industrials and 1.09 points for the 30 rails.

Strength in U. S. Bonds

Strength in Treasury bonds in greatly increased turnover was a feature of the market today in which most domestic issues also moved ahead in large volume.

The rise in treasuries, amounting to around ¼ point in the late over-counter prices for long-term issues, marked almost the first time that the market had gotten away from the seesaw tendency of going down when stocks went up on news and going up when stocks moved over. The rise coincided with an advance in stocks and observers believed that less stress was being laid on day-to-day war developments in Treasury bond trading. It also was reported that the rise had brought in a substantial amount of buying. This was reflected in the Treasury volume on the stock exchange amounting to $1,360,000 against $400,000 in the preceding session.

Firmness in the general list on the stock exchange lifted the average for 30 bonds 0.84 point on the day. Total volume was $10,589,000, against $4,947,000 on Monday. Foreign obligations were again mixed. Canadian obligations were among the strongest, with gains of one to more than three points, while Danish loans were under pressure and registered new lows.

All sections of the domestic bond market shared in the advance, the strongest tone appearing in the more speculative rails were the average showed a rise of 1.66 points. High grade rails were up 0.91 in the averages.

Industrials were up 0.50 point and utilities up 0.54 point in the averages.

Grain Upturn Follows News From Europe

Wheat, Corn, Oats and Rye Close at Best Levels in 2 Weeks

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 17.—European war news poured buying fuel on another bull market in the grain pits today and prices shot up about two cents a bushel to the best levels in two to three weeks or more.

Closing prices were at the session's highs in every pit on the trading floor. Wheat finished 1⅞ to 2¼ higher than yesterday, December 86¼@86⅜, May 85¼@85 3-8; corn 1¼ to 2 higher, December 51@51⅛, May 54@54⅛; Oats 1⅝ to 1⅞ up; soy beans 1¼ to 2 up; rye ¾ to 1 higher and lard 15 to 20 higher.

Wheat prices jumped as much as 1⅜ cents at the opening bell. Pit brokers scanning news bulletin boards on which were posted dispatches telling of German attacks on the British navy and French army said there was evidence of increased public participation in the trade. Reactions from early highs of almost a cent occurred later at times but just before the close the upturn was resumed.

Sales to Europe

Two cargoes of Canadian wheat were reported sold to Great Britain and Scandinavian countries also were in the market. Almost 4,000,000 bushels of wheat were being loaded in Rumania for Great Britian and this revived talk that British interests are purchasing wheat at sources that might supply Germany.

Corn lagged behind the wheat upturn for a while but rallied before the close. Great Britian was understood to have bought a cargo of United States corn and vessel space was chartered to move 105,000 bushels to Buffalo. Oats and rye advanced with other grains although Northwest interests sold rye against purchases of corn. Lard reflected the upturn in hogs, grains and cottonseed oil.

General Buying Lifts Cotton 40 To 70 Cents a Bale

New York, Oct. 17 (AP).—The apparent determination of the belligerent nations to get down to brass tacks in their fighting spurred renewed interest in cotton futures today. Broad outside buying, plus demand from trade and mill accounts, lifted the market to final gains of 8 to 14 points.

Nonetheless, chief market interest centered on the October delivery, which went off the board at noon at a decline of 4 points. Despite liquidation of about 21,000 bales, the spot month held firm throughout the morning, going to 9.27. On the sale of only 400 bales at the close, however, it dropped 11 points from the previous trade.

Fast buying of stocks and most other commodities exerted considerable influence on cotton. At one time, in fact, quotations were 11 to 18 points higher but last-minute profit taking chipped away the peaks.

Cottonseed Oil
Speculative interests climbed back into the cottonseed oil futures market today, helping to boost the market 24 to 28 points. Buying followed the pattern of outside markets.

Sales totaled 143 contracts: December, 7.01 bid; January, 7.06 bid; March, 7.23; May, 7.32.

Refiners reported crude oil was not available below 8 cents late in the day in the Southeast and valley while bids were in the market at 8¼ cents. Texas reported small sales at 5¾.

Cotton Subsidy Sales 2,886,000 Bales Since Aug. 1

The Agriculture Department reported that sales of cotton and cotton products under the Government's export subsidy program totaled 2,886,000 bales between August 1 and October 14. The sales did not include 690,000 bales to be delivered to Great Britain under terms of the British-American cotton-rubber barter agreement.

Under the export program, the Government pays a bounty of 1½ cents per pound on raw cotton and equivalent payments on cotton products sold abroad.

Actual exports of cotton from August 1 through to October 12 were reported at 1,082,469 bales, compared with 828,000 bales during the corresponding period last year.

The department hopes to place at least 6,000,000 bales of American cotton in foreign markets during the current marketing season. This would almost double the low volume of exports during the past season.

Mrs. Draper Ruled Insane In Mate's Death

Cleared at Frederick In 'God's Will' Killing

By the Associated Press

Frederick, Md., Oct. 17.—Mrs. Leona Draper, 19, was freed tonight of a murder charge in the fatal shooting of her husband, Frederick County Circuit Court judges ruling she was not guilty by reason of insanity.

They ordered her committed to the Springfield State Hospital for the Insane "until she shall have recovered her reason and be discharged by due course of law."

Mrs. Draper, who had pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity, heard the verdict with no sign of emotion.

She admitted shooting 41-year-old Dewey Grafton Draper in the yard of their mountain home near Wolfsville August 7, telling officers she did it because he beat her.

"Felt It Was God's Will

"I felt it was God's will, or I wouldn't have hit him so well," she said in a statement read during the brief trial yesterday.

Associate Judges Arthur D. Willard, Frederick, and Stedman Prescott, Rockville, heard the testimony, including that of three mental experts who testified Mrs. Draper was mentally deficient.

Dr. Hosea W. McAdoo, former superintendent of the Springfield Hospital, testified he believed the defendant was insane, and Dr. Katharina Stuber, psychiatrist at the hospital, said she had the mentality of a 10-year-old.

Dr. George H. Preston, State commissioner of mental hygiene, said she was of limited mentality, but he felt she knew the difference between right and wrong.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

It probably would happen only in a slap-dash rubber-bridge game that today's hand would be played at four spades. In the deliberate and scientific duplicate tournament such a rash contract probably would never be attempted. Conservative experts would be unlikely to climb beyond a part score.

But Louis Gotthelf, who compares favorably with Jacoby when it comes to speedy play, bid and made the hand at one of his more profitable sessions.

Any West player would feel moderately confident of setting the contract with six trumps, including the king, queen and ten; but he would have an unhappy surprise.

Gotthelf won ten tricks on the North-South cards without the aid of a revoke by the defense. Do you see how he did it?

It was necessary for him to shorten his own trumps, clearing West's hand of exit cards at the same time, so that he could perform a progressive end play to rob West of two of his potential spade winners. Here is how he did it: West led his singleton jack of clubs. Declarer took the ace, played a diamond to the king and threw a club on the diamond ace. He played a third diamond and trumped. He led the heart nine, finessed the queen, cashed the ace and trumped another diamond.

He was now ready to start the end play. West's hand was stripped to six spades. Gotthelf led a losing club and West was forced to ruff. He next led the spade king, and declarer held off. A low spade followed, which South took with the nine. He led his last club; again West was forced to ruff. West was now left with the queen-ten of trumps and could do nothing but lead into South's ace-jack trap.

Yet when you heard how it happened, it was natural enough. Selling that gadget for carburetors, Eli had learned a good deal about cars (from his poverty-darkened childhood he had had the yearning passion for automobiles of the boy brought up without one) and he had come to know several of the mechanics in various garages. One of them was Bill Peck, a rough-spoken older workingman employed in a garage in Ashley. Peck had a brother working in St. Johnsbury who happened to write him that the old bus line there was about to replace its two battered ancient buses with new ones.

When Eli heard this news he was awed to feel, blowing from it as from the Delphian pit, the authentic wind of inspiration. Dizzy, but agonizingly in earnest, he told Peck that if those two old cars could be had at a bargain he was sure something could be made out of them at the academy. There is no resisting those who have breathed in the divine afflatus. Peck was a pool-playing old bachelor with no wife to restrain him from follies; he withdrew a few hundred dollars from his saving account, borrowed a little more for insurance, and went into the bus business, he driving one and Eli the other. This did not interfere with his job at the garage, since that was daytime work, and since Eli, after school hours and on Saturdays, did all the repair and upkeep for the two venerable rehicles.

The engines were still in fair shape, but the bodies and seats were disreputable. The older man was willing to put the first profits into paint and denim, and Eli got up eagerly at dawn, day after day, to scrape, mend, paint and patch. Even at their worst, the two rickety buses were more comfortable, enclosed as they were, than the open pulpwood trucks in which, standing up on zero nights, the teams and a few hardy backers had formerly ridden to out-of-town games. With Prof. Hulme to help him, although really, Timothy thought, he did nothing but sit watching with astonishment the energetic play of the boy's awakened mind, Eli worked out a season ticket plan. Two weeks later he was back in the principal's office.

"SAY, Perfessor Hulme . . ."

"Yes, Eli."

"Perfessor Hulme, I want you should let me put some money in the savings bank, and have the book in your name."

"What's the matter with your name?"

"My father'd take it. I ain't of age."

Mr. Hulme looked at him.

"I'm not of age," the boy corrected himself.

"Well, all right. But we must put something in writing to show it is yours."

"Naw, I don't want nothin' written—down."

"I mean I don't want anything written down. My father'd get hold of the money somehow."

"Oh . . . But, Eli, suppose I should die? How could you make anybody believe it was your money?"

"Oh, Perfessor, you ain't agoin' to die, you know you ain't! I mean you're not agoin' to die. Now, Perfessor, please . . ."

The first entry was of four dollars and twenty-one cents. And then there was one of one dollar and two cents. And after that, six dollars and eighty-four cents. Presently the bank book showed twenty-three dollars and a half—more than any Kemp had ever owned at one time. Eli's long, melancholy face was calm and bright as he watched the other boys and girls stream in cheering and yelling, "You gotta win! You gotta win! You gotta win!" to the town hall or gymnasium or made-over barn where a match was to be played, while he stayed outside in the sub-zero night to nurse and tend and warm up and listen to the valiant old engines. And to test the brakes. Making sure of the brakes was Eli's daily joy. His busses might be overcrowded, but there were to be no accidents with them. He drove slowly and with impassioned care. His elderly partner always disappeared in the direction of the village pool parlor till the game was over and the Clifford rooters came out yelling,

"Slingulation
Jingualtion!
One! Two! Three!
Clifford Academy
And old T. C."

It was in style, therefore, or relatively in style, that the Academy team and its rooters went off to games on Friday and Saturday nights. Some of the older Clifford basketball and hockey fans joined in, those who formerly had not been willing to take their own cars out to wait for hours in Arctic temperatures. Some of the younger teachers in the Primary School—ex-Academy girls themselves, mostly—often came along too, as much for the fun of the trip as for any interest in basketball. That forty-five to fifty were jammed into space meant for thirty only added to the hilarity.

T. C. USED sometimes surreptitiously to put cotton in his ears, to give them a little rest from the barbaric hullabaloo of the yelling and cheering, but he never closed his eyes to rest them from what they saw. Sitting at the end, his legs stretched across the not-very-reliable door to make sure that none of the younger children fell out in the course of their rough-housing fun, he gazed and gazed (very well aware of the wealth the show to him had brought) at the contrast between the raw adolescent faces—chubby lumpish girls all the more touchingly childish because of their absurdly adult coiffures, raw-boned, uncouth lads, none the less little boys because of the gawky Adam's apple in their long necks—and Susan's face hanging in their midst like a star. It was young too, yes—but shapely with the subtly modeled ripeness of womanhood. The mild gray eyes were mature enough to meet his, often, with the smile of one indulgent adult to another in a crowd of lovable but preposterous children. The extravagance of youth all around her was like a complementary color, bringing out the fact which made T. C.'s wakeful nights happy ones, that she was not so young—not so young—not too young!

He never missed one of these expeditions. Many times that winter, Clifford parents, settling, relieved, to quiet evenings after their boisterous, disorderly boys and girls had gone out, gave a moment's grateful thought to teachers in general, and said how faithful Professor Hulme was to go around with those crazy kids and keep them in order the way he did; they expected he got pretty sick of it sometimes.

The late Sunday afternoons in the living room of the principal's house turned out better that winter too, or so it seemed to Timothy. He had invented them, long ago, as a substitute for the traditional entertaining required from a principal, impossible for him because of Aunt Lavinia's housekeeping. But he had lived through many years of their ups and downs and had no illusions about them. In his mind his only claim to real success with them came from the fact that they had been the occasion of one of the few of his many battles with old Mr. Wheaton in which he had come off absolute victor. With the keen eye for commercial publicity which had been the basis of his first success in selling carpets, Mr. Wheaton had first proposed and then insisted on a paragraph in the Academy catalogue, along the lines of . . . "delightful hospitality from Mr. Hume assures intimate personal relations with students—gathering around the century-old hearth where their fathers and grandfathers sat, the young people munch apples and under the old Hume family motto of 'Noblesse oblige,' listen to the headmaster, famed for his reading aloud of the classics . . . townspeople are also welcome, which affords an opportunity to the students for contact with fine old-American . . ."

"But, Mr. Wheaton, that's not the hearth where their fathers and grandfathers . . . ! It had been closed up from about 1840, when stoves were first brought to town, till I came here and had it opened. And I'm never called the Headmaster—Clifford hasn't enough money to go in for that imitation-English business. I'm just the principal. And 'Noblesse oblige' is not the Hulme family motto—with an l if you please—the only reason it hangs on my wall is because it is a piece of needlework done by some grandmother or other that my aunt has an old-woman's notion of keeping. And very few older Clifford people ever appear—except Mr. Dewey, of course. I wish they did, but I never can get them to. Most of them frankly find it an awful bore. And I do not by any means always read aloud. Sometimes the young people can't bear the thought of being read aloud to, any more, and they start to sing . . ."

Mr. Wheaton's soft, wrinkled, manicured old hand reached for a pad. He began to write, reading his words aloud as he did, "Gathering around the piano in the twilight to the accompaniment of the principal's accomplished playing, they . . ." Timothy broke in with some violence, "Howl, I should have said. It's frightful. They have no ear for music! My aunt can't endure it. Let them start 'Jingle Bells,' she beats a retreat that makes her forget her stiff knees." Fixing Mr. Wheaton with his coldest eye, he laid down the law, "To put anything at all in our catalogue about those afternoons would be an overstatement. When I've been especially dull for a while, or when the skating's good, or in spring when there's a full moon, why, the only students who come are the kind who think I'll give them better marks if they do. Sometimes there's nobody at all."

YET THE VERY Sunday after this protest, Mr. Wheaton had sent a photographer all the way from the city to get a flashlight picture of the younger generation gathered at the principal's knee as he read the classics. Timothy had always valued the Sunday afternoon gatherings more highly after the day when he had shut the door in that photographer's face.

As a matter of literal fact, in spite of the wormwood he had hastily distilled in Mr. Wheaton's synthetic syrup, there were often a good many people in the house on late Sunday afternoons and they showed, in the astringent Vermont way, that they rather enjoyed themselves. These events were always managed, year after year, with exactly the same inexpensive and labor-saving system, because, what with his lack of extra money and the odd housekeeping of his aunt, that was the only one possible for the principal. The house was open all the afternoon, but till along about 5, most people—students, teachers, occasional townsfolks—took naps, went skating, sat in a corner holding hands, wrote letters home, read the Sunday newspapers. Prof. Hulme was due to appear in his living-room at 5. He brought with him apples from the cellar, and from the kitchen, doughnuts, popcorn, salt, and a small pitcher of melted butter. Those who were thirsty went ut to the dipper at the kitchen sink. There were two corn poppers, the fireplace being a broad old-fashioned one for long firewood, and they and the flatirons on which the buttternuts were cracked, were kept going to the accompaniment of an incredible din of chatter and shrieking laughter till everybody had had all he could eat.

Then—well, in the old Vermont phrase which always amused Timothy—they "did what they felt to." Sometimes they wanted him to sit down at the piano and bang out the accompaniment for the songs so afflicting to Aunt Lavinia, from "The Bull Frog on the Bank" to "I Was Seeing Nellie Ho-o-m-e." Once in a while a chance question started a quite interesting discussion like the time when a senior boy asked if Prof. Hulme really thought it would be a good thing to have everybody fingerprinted, the way that piece in the Sunday paper said, and before they were through with this subject an ink pad had been brought down from his study and the collection of academy fingerprints begun which later helped a graduate to a good job. Aunt Lavinia said frankly (what her nephew often thought most adults feel) that young people bored and fatigued her; but once in a while a flicker of her old charm flared up as she took the center of the stage to recite a poem of Robert Burns in her broadest Scotch, which, she always told them impressively, was not a dialect, but more truly a language of its own than their meager Yankeeisms. Mr. Dewey, whose great stooped frame was always there in the background, had been known to tell one of the old Clifford stories—what his grandfather had told him about the battle of Hubbardton, or the time his great-grandmother killed the bear with the pitchfork.

The one rule which Timothy laid down about these gatherings—a rule born of desperation as he looked forward to an uninterrupted succession of them in his future—was that the Stern Daughter of the Voice of God was not to be let into the house on Sunday afternoons. Nobody was to come, the Principal wanted that clearly understood, if there was something else he'd rather do; nobody need stay if he'd rather go or if he felt like using rougher language and making more noise than was the custom in a living-room; nobody was to talk if he'd prefer not to; everybody was to say anything that came into his head as far as decency permitted. He insisted on the same privilege of spontaneity for himself. They could go elsewhere to be dutiful, he told his guests; and if they wanted him to be dutiful, they could just look him up in office hours. All that he had to offer them in his home on these Sundays was a two-hour chance to do collectively what they enjoyed doing; a vacation from what somebody thought might be good for them. That's what he expected from them, he said, and that was all they might expect from him.

THERE WAS, of course, he knew, a good deal of pretense in this invitation to sincerity, as in everything human. He by no means always read aloud what he would have preferred, and it was all too often necessary to put on for decency's sake a look of interest in the proceedings that was far from expressing the clock-watching resignation into which he fell when he was in a mood of juiceless school-teacherism. But that winter there was much less of this necessary pretense—the Sunday afternoons seemed distinctly agreeable. The new boy, Jules, had found an old cello in the corner of Miss Peck's attic, strung it and brought it along with him Sundays, to resort to in case of singing. It was astonishing how his playing the air with long, sweeping, arrogant bow strokes herded back to the proximity of the key even the worst of the waverers.

Clare Boothe Puts Hitlerism On the Spot

'Margin for Error' Mystery-Melodrama With Comic Punch

By Nelson B. Bell

"MARGIN FOR ERROR." Richard Aldrich and Richard Myers present a new play in two acts by Clare Boothe. Directed by Otto L. Preminger; setting by Donald Oenslager. At the National Theater.

THE CAST

Baron Max von Alcenator ..... Bramwell Fletcher
Officer Finkelstein ..... Sam Levene
Frieda ..... Evelyn Wahle
Dr. Jennings ..... Bert Lytell
Karl Baumer ..... Otto L. Preminger
Sophie Baumer ..... Elspeth Eric
Otto Horst ..... Philip Coolidge
Thomas Denny ..... Lief Erickson
Captain Mulrooney ... Edward McNamara

It is difficult to concede that in "Margin For Error," Clare Boothe has written what is, for her, a new sort of play. The plot, to be sure, gets pretty thoroughly away from the trends of "The Women" and "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," but what is the difference between satirical comedy and mystery-melodrama to a playwright with such an unerring sense of incisive humor, so pungent a command of crisp dialogue and so intuitive a faculty for striking characterization and the contrivance of interesting and suspenseful situations? Upon the evidence of last night's first metropolitan performance of her new play, at the National Theater, we should say none whatever.

There would seem to be no justification, either, for the emphatic declaration that "Margin For Error" is not propaganda. It is as blistering and delightful a blast against the perversions of Hitlerism as one would care to encounter. It accomplishes its purpose of laying the twisted thinking and warped political ideology of Berlin in the dust bin both by riddling direct fire and a smothering barrage of ridicule. There is not much left for America to fear by the time the final curtain descends upon the second and last act.

Singes Hitler's Ears

A first act, laid, as both are, in the office of a Nazi consul in a large American city, affords the author a priceless opportunity to say precisely what she thinks of the lunatic juggernaut that now menaces the world, and thus provide abundant motivation for the consul's violent death, as a happy first curtain and a framework upon which to drape the attempted solution of the ostensible murder by the lone Jewish policeman intrusted with the duty of shielding the duel-scarred martinet from harm. The antithetical aspects of Hitlerism versus Americanism are given a thorough going over in that first act. The second resolves itself into a complete confirmation of Miss Boothe's contention that her play, after all, is merely a comically spiced melodramatic mystery, innocent of any profound solution of the ills that beset the world. To many the denouement of the play will prove the fulfillment of a tremendous amount of wishful thinking.

Only nine characters are needed to convey the message of hope and effect an eminently agreeable disposition of the affairs of the consulate. They are the consul himself, of course; his estranged wife, the American newspaper columnist, with whom she is in love; the secretary of the consulate, an eminent physician, a maid, the fuehrer of the American-German Bund, Capt. Mulrooney, of the homicide squad, and that prodigious "flatfoot," Patrolman Moe Finkelstein. Among these characters are to be found more than one—as was the case also in "Kiss the Boys Goodbye"—whose probable identity will be promptly determined in the mind of every spectator of the play. The identities, in many instances, no doubt will reflect a magnificent catholicity of taste and judgement. There will be scant divergence, however, upon the uniform excellence of the cast.

Effectively Cast

The first act is dominated with admirable hellishness by Otto L. Preminger, who not only makes clear Miss Boothe's insistence that he play the consul, but additionally is responsible for the staging of the play. Bramwell Fletcher, last seen here in the command performance of "Outward Bound," is the neurotic secretary, made victim of a "war of nerves" by the fact that his grandmother, whom he had never seen, was a Jewess and his usefulness to the Reich therefore at an end. He plays the part with the emotional intensity that he above most of his contemporaries is able to command. Leif Erickson, as the columnist, and Bert Lytell, as the doctor, fill their roles snugly and Elspeth Eric is an entrancing feminine foil for her husband's enormous capacity for wrecking otherwise happy lives. The head of the American-German Bund, Otto Horst, is a penetrating caricature as played by Philip Coolidge.

And that policeman! As Mr. Preminger carried the dominant note in the first act so does Sam Levene take almost complete possession of the second. There is perhaps a trifle too much that is repetitious in his inquisition of the suspects, but there is never too much of Mr. Levene. If the play has a star, he is it.

Edward McNamara, as Capt. Mulrooney, has only the final curtain line to speak, but speaks that inflammatory few wrds with a gusto that is beautiful to hear. So beautiful that it set the crowd howling "author, author" after the cast had wearied of taking bows. The cries were infinitely more futile than their object's play. Miss Boothe did not appear. Her play will be appearing for a long time to come.

Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 17.—The Supreme Court upheld today a Jefferson County injunction restraining sale of 9,996 shares of Charles Town Jockey Club stock at $1 a share on the ground the proposed transaction was fraudulent.

The case, another in the long litigation involving the club which operates the race track at Charles Town, involved a resolution of the board of directors on October 14, 1938, proposing to dispose of the shares in designated blocks at $1 a share.

Albert J. Boyle, president and general manager, filed suit against H. G. Siegele, R. S. Kaufman, G. K. Wysong nad George M. Beltzhoover, jr., other directors, asking a restraining order. He contended the proposed sale was fraudulent.

The proposed stock allotment would have been 2,000 shares to Corinne Mason, 1,999 shares to the Charles Town Horse Show Association, 4,000 shares of mechanics' lien creditors of the Jockey Club and 1,997 shares to Boyle.

"We believe," the opinion of Judge John Kenna said, "that the bill sufficiently alleges a fraudulent conspiracy to sell the corporate stock of the Charles Town Jockey Club, Inc., for less than one-fifteenth of its value."
